THE NATIONAL NEWSPAPER OF MARKETING

Tool Has Been 'Resting Quietly on Shelf,' Dixon Tells Proprietary Assn.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, May 16—Federal Trade Commission Chairman Paul Rand Dixon said today that his commission is going to be looking at "unfair" as well as "deceptive" ads and business practices.

In a speech before the Proprietary Assn., the new FTC chairman said the "unfair" provision of the FTC act is "one of the tools which have been resting quietly on a shelf in the FTC workshop."

"We have now taken them down and are readying them for use," he declared.

Other fields of FTC interest which he stressed in his speech—his third on advertising since taking office—included:

1. Determination to use injunction and criminal proceedings against drug ads in appropriate cases.
2. Increased use of mail investigations in order to collect information quickly and cut down the loss of time in bringing cases.
3. A campaign against drug companies which misrepresent the quality control standards used in their factories.
4. More moves against drug advertisers to require affirmative disclosures where half-truths are deceptive and confusing. Particular emphasis is contemplated, he indicated, to assure that purchasers get full information about limitations.

American Airlines on the Wing; Y&R Loses $6,000,000 Account

BBDO, Bates, DDB, Lennen & Newell Vie for Carrier's Business

NEW YORK, May 19—American Airlines visited Ted Bates & Co. yesterday as it began screening four agencies for its $6,000,000 account.

Young & Rubicam, which took over the account on June 1, 1959, will lose the business Aug. 15. The other agencies in contention are Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn; Doyle Dane Bernbach; and Lennen & Newell. Ogilvy, Benson & Mather had been a contender, but David Ogilvy withdrew from contention today.

When American switched from Lennen & Newell to Y&R two years ago, the move followed on the heels of Charles Rheinstrom's return to the airline as exec vp in charge of sales. Seven months after he picked Y&R, Mr. Rheinstrom left American to rejoin the

Continental Enters Retail Cigarette Field With Detroit Test

DETROIT, May 18—Continental Tobacco Co. will jump into the retail cigarette scramble June 5, using a six-week market test in the greater Detroit area to launch three king-size cigarettes.

Continental will spend $247,000 in radio, television and newspapers in six Michigan cities to introduce the smoking public to Continental, a filter tip; de Menthe, a mentholated brand; and Ascot, a plain tip.

The Detroit test will mark the first time the Huntington, W. Va., mail order house has ventured into the crowded retail cigarette market. Continental has been selling these three brands, plus three others, by direct mail.

Continental plans to sell its cigarettes in supermarket chains, independent groceries, drug stores and vending machines.

A. L. Jacobson Co., Detroit management consultant, has been engaged by Continental to handle the national marketing program. Mr. Jacobson told ADVERTISING AGE that Continental is aiming for 0.5% of the retail market in the Detroit area, or about $1,000,000 in retail sales, during the six weeks. Plans for retail distribution in other parts of the country will hinge on the success of the Detroit test, he said, adding that several other metropolitan markets are under consideration for eventual expansion.

The company's hopes for cracking the retail field center around a 15¢ "dividend cheque" in every carton, redeemable on any allowable merchandise in the store.

The merchant, in addition to the extra 15¢ sale, also will get a 10¢ handling fee on each coupon. In addition, he will get the coupons

J. Walter Thompson Co.

Rumors that the account might change agencies picked up velocity last year when C. L. (Bill) Smith left Lennen & Newell to join BBDO. Mr. Smith, who supervised the airline account at Ruthrauff & Ryan and then at L&N, is the brother of C. R. Smith, president of American Airlines.

The rumor got a new lease on life two months ago when Thomas J. Ross Jr. came over from Lennen & Newell to become advertising director of American. Mr. Ross worked under Bill Smith on the American account at Ruthrauff & Ryan and then at L&N.

Mr. Ross never made any secret of his admiration for Bill Smith as an adman, nor of his high opinion of the advertising produced by Mr. Smith while both were servicing the American account.

C. R. Smith is known to take an active interest in American's advertising. Earlier this year he wrote, word-for-word, an Astrojet

U.S. Is Nearly Ready to Select Tourism Agency

$3,000,000 Account Will Involve Ads in 12 Promising Countries

WASHINGTON, May 18—With Congress ready to put its final approval on plans for an overseas tourism program, the Commerce Department was preparing this week to go about the touchy business of picking an advertising agency.

The problems involved in selecting an agency have been carefully studied for some time, according to William Ruder, the department's top information executive. Mr. Ruder says he believes the department has worked up such rigid criteria for the selection that there need be no fear that the selection will be based on anything other than merit.

$10,000,000 Chesterfield Account Shifts to JWT

Duke, Oasis Brands Also Move to Thompson After 5 Years at McCann

NEW YORK, May 19—Liggett & Myers moved its $10,000,000 Chesterfield, Duke and Oasis accounts out of McCann-Erickson yesterday and assigned them to J. Walter Thompson Co., effective Aug. 18. (L&M filters remain with Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample.)

The announcement came just about five years after the acquisition of the account by McCann, after Liggett & Myers had been with Cunningham & Walsh for 37 years.

It was understood that Liggett & Myers had recently been talking to agencies, and that among the agencies they had conversations with were Compton Advertising, Young & Rubicam and Ogilvy, Benson & Mather.

Behind the switch lay a simple fact: Liggett & Myers brands haven't been maintaining share of market against R. J. Reynolds, American Tobacco and rising Philip Morris & Co.

In 1960, Liggett & Myers sales fell 2.1% to $543,172,587—while competitors showed gains.

Late in March, William A. Blount, president of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., told a stockholders meeting that sales and earnings would be down for the first quarter of 1961 and "it's most humiliating to us." He took some of the blame himself, pointed out that Liggett & Myers pays the highest dividends of any tobacco company, and said Chesterfield kings and L&M filters were showing some gains.

Last fall, Mr. Blount reported glumly that Oasis wasn't holding its own in the burgeoning menthol field (in 1960, it had about 20% of the share of market—

FCC Queries Nets on Non-Standard Affiliate Contracts

WASHINGTON, May 18—In another move to look into relationships between networks and affiliates, the staff of the Federal Communications Commission asked networks this week for detailed information about non-standard affiliation contracts.

The commission staff started by asking CBS for information about the new incentive contracts which it is planning to offer affiliates in the future.

Later the staff expanded its inquiry

National Price Ads Pay: Chrysler; Shows Sales Rise as Industry Dips

DETROIT, May 17—The Chrysler-Imperial division of Chrysler Corp. is gambling nearly all of its current advertising budget on a national price ad campaign, and the gamble seems to be paying off in a healthy rise in retail sales.

The campaign began Feb. 10, when the division broke the first of its national ads featuring a Chrysler Newport four-door sedan for a suggested retail price of $2,964, exclusive of destination charge and state and local taxes. Since then, the division's sales curve has shown a steady upward trend.

"Some of our biggest dealers told us we couldn't do it," said C. E. Briggs, Chrysler Corp. vp and general manager of the division. "They said they had tried specific price ads, using a price even lower than $2,964, and they told us their promotions had flopped."

But the two things that have made the Chrysler "2964" campaign pay off, explained Mr. Briggs, have been the national character of the ads and the fact that this model actually is available in dealer showrooms.

"People tend to believe a national ad, placed by the factory," he said, "where they might doubt a dealer price ad. And when they charge into the showroom and demand to see the car, they are surprised to find that there really is a full-size Chrysler priced at $2,964."

Proof of the success of the campaign, he added, can be seen in the division's sales figures, which show a 12.4% increase since the campaign began. Because dealers

Last Minute News Flashes

Blair Departure May Hint Drop in Chrysler TV Use

DETROIT, May 19—James Blair, broadcast account executive on the Plymouth account at N. W. Ayer & Son, has left Ayer to join WWJ-TV, Detroit, as a producer. This move lent credibility to reports that Chrysler Corp. is not planning to replace the Lawrence Welk and Garry Moore shows, though, as ADVERTISING AGE went to press, Chrysler said it had not made up its mind. If the two shows are not replaced, the tv billing losses would amount to more than $8,000,000 for Ayer, which has Plymouth, and $7,000,000 for Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn, which handles Dodge.

Pittsburgh Plate Cuts Field to JWT, Ketchum

PITTSBURGH, May 19—Pittsburgh Plate Glass was understood today to have narrowed its new agency search to J. Walter Thompson Co. and Ketchum, MacLeod & Grove. The account, now with Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn, bills about $2,500,000. Other agencies which made presentations were Compton Advertising; D'Arcy Advertising Co.; Maxon Inc.; and Young & Rubicam. The new agency will be announced by June 1.

TV Networks Lock Up Fall Schedules Early at Cost of Program Flexibility

By Maurine Christopher

NEW YORK, May 18—Any advertiser with nighttime network tv dollars left to spend won't have any trouble getting rid of them.

Some hour-long shows which the networks have locked into the 1961-'62 schedule to ride rating trends and knock out competition are still waiting for sponsor nibbles.

Again this season, cool advertiser reaction to much of the inflexible schedules causes wonder-ment about the nets' basic programming strategy. With autumn far off, they commit themselves to expensive hour series, sometimes before they have sounded out buyer reaction to the packages. Invariably, some big ones have to be sold at bargain prices.

■ Why the rush? One wonders why the network programming moguls don't wait to see what promising programs might be ferreted out by advertisers and their agencies, at least for some time periods. The networks might even leave some room for bright ideas that might burst forth from some creative programming man between May and September.

A maddening aspect of the television business in recent seasons has been that, while networks have "locked in" shows that go begging for backers, advertisers and agencies, and perhaps talent agents, may have complete programs, including sponsors, and still be unable to find a place for them. Latest victim of this tv quirk is George Gobel, who reportedly had P&G ready and raring to sponsor his new show. ABC held out for "Margie," a situation comedy based on a long-ago movie. P&G went along and bought the ABC-controlled "Margie" in preference to Mr. Gobel's latest tv offering.

Why are copies of already over-taxed formats or longer versions of old shows so enticing that the networks can't resist rushing to sign them?

Another 'Wagon Train'

"Wagon Train" is great for NBC and a full lineup of sponsors, so CBS will go on the road in a wagon with "Frontier Circus" in the fall, but so far no sponsors are signed. CBS tried holding out against the rush to minute participation selling, but agencies can get minutes on this one for about $30,000—a cut-rate that spells a loss for the network.

■ Television already teems with investigators, but CBS has installed "The Investigators," an insurance pair, in the Thursday 9 p.m., EST, spot. There have been no takers at approximately $30,000 per minute.

Other partly or wholly available CBS nighttime shows include "Pete & Gladys," an off-shoot of

Barney Link

Link, Procter Named to AFA Hall of Fame

NEW YORK, May 18—Two advertising pioneers, Barney Link and Harley Procter, have been elected to the Advertising Hall of Fame, sponsored by the Advertising Federation of America.

Mr. Link spent most of his career in the outdoor advertising industry and was instrumental in organizing the Outdoor Advertising Assn. of America. In 1904, he also was one of the founders of a predecessor organization to the AFA. He was active in advertising until his death in 1917.

■ Mr. Procter started out in his family business, Procter & Gamble, as one of its three salesmen. He early realized the sales potential of advertising and, as far back as the 1880s, he used page ads when most companies were still using small notices. He brought out the best magazine illustrators of the day for his ads and initiated the use of testimonials, verse and humor as well as premiums and attractive packaging. He also named Ivory soap and coined its slogan "99 44/100% pure." He died in 1920. #

National BBB Makes Denver Unit Cutoff Conditional Oct. 15

NEW YORK, May 16—The Assn. of Better Business Bureaus has granted the Denver Area Better Business Bureau a postponement of its suspension as a member until Oct. 15 (AA, May 15).

The postponement of the suspension was made after officials of the Denver group at the 47th annual conference in Phoenix expressed a willingness to consider changes in its "Emblem of Truth in Advertising" program (AA, Feb. 27, March 20, 27), to bring it into line with national BBB policies.

■ Suspension of the Denver bureau was voted by the national association's board of governors May 7. Denver representatives appealed to the general conference the following day. The conference voted to affirm the board's action, but set Oct. 15 as the effective date.

The association's board will review any changes made before Oct. 15 to determine if the suspension is to be effected on that date. #

Unger Resigns as Head of NTA

BEVERLY HILLS, May 18—Oliver A. Unger has resigned as board chairman, president and a director of National Telefilm Associates, effective immediately. No reason was given for the move.

A special meeting of the board of directors has been scheduled here for May 20, at which time new officers of the company will be named. NTA has figured heavily in the news recently, with reports of the sale of several of its properties. On June 1, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will take over NTA's Teletudios, its tv tape production subsidiary (AA, May 15). NTA also is in the final stages of the sale of WNTA to Communications Industries Corp. for $1,700,000 and negotiations are being conducted for the sale of WNTA-TV for a reported $5,750,000.

Mr. Unger joined NTA as president in October, 1957. He took over as chief executive officer when Ely A. Landau resigned last February. #

Auto Makers Seek Flexibility in TV Purchases: Moore

PHILADELPHIA, May 16—The automobile industry is not pulling in its horns in the purchase of radio flexibility in programming, Wendell "Pete" Moore, advertising manager of the Dodge division, Chrysler Corp., told the Philadelphia Television & Radio Advertising Club last week.

Mr. Moore said that automobile manufacturers are seeking new audiences in new markets and, consequently, must have flexibility.

"We could be clobbered by living out a 52-week contract," he added.

■ He went on to describe modern marketing as meeting the customer's needs and desires, saying that he feels advertisers could profit by spending less time studying their products and more time studying their consumers.

Mr. Moore also urged business men to be more original in their marketing practices and even to poke fun at themselves.

He pointed to the Dodge ads and radio spots in which the company boasts about losing the recent Mobilgas Economy Run.

■ Murray Arnold, WPEN, was elected president of the club for the coming year. Other officers elected were Edward Papazian, Gray & Rogers, vp; Morton Simon, an attorney, vp and counsel; Lewis Klein, WFIL, treasurer; and Mrs. Doris Stewart, free lance writer, secretary. Walter L. Tillman, TV Guide, immediate past president of the club, became board chairman.

BATTLE—The aluminum-steel bumper battle is beginning to heat up with this second in a series of newspaper ads by Great Lakes Steel Corp. (AA, May 15), via Campbell-Mithun. Meanwhile, Reynolds Metals (Clinton E. Frank) will revive its Rusty & Sally radio commercials, angled at auto execs, on Detroit stations starting Monday, May 22.

Adams & Keyes, E. S. Kellogg Co. Will Merge

LOS ANGELES, May 19—Adams & Keyes and Edward S. Kellogg Co. have consolidated their operations here in advance of a formal merger to be consummated within the next few months, ADVERTISING AGE learned this week.

Betty Thomas, in charge of the Adams & Keyes office, said that the two agencies are occupying the same quarters, but that clients are still handled separately. "We have every intention of merging, however," she said.

Adams & Keyes has offices in Los Angeles and New York and bills about $9,000,000. The Kellogg shop operates locally and bills in the $300,000 to $500,000 range.

Adams & Keyes folded its Chicago office more than a year ago, following the departure of Carl Harris with the $100,000 Dearborn Chemical Co. account (AA, Nov. 30, '59; Jan. 18, '60). Stauffer Chemical Co. consolidated advertising for all its divisions, except one, with Adams & Keyes' New York office last February (AA, Feb. 13).

■ Edward S. Kellogg Co. merged with Lansdale Co., also a Los Angeles agency, under the Kellogg name in the spring of 1957. Combined billing was reported as close to $2,000,000 (AA, March 25, '57). A few months later, Kellogg opened a Northern California office in San Carlos, and named Gordon M. Gumpertz, a former account executive of Hixson & Jorgensen, an account supervisor in Los Angeles (AA, June 17, '57). In February, 1959, Mr. Gumpertz, Phil Bentley, Kellogg pr director and account executive, and Forrest Dolan, vp, left Kellogg with some accounts and formed their own agency, Gumpertz, Bentley & Dolan (AA, Jan. 12, '59). #

FM Stations See Ad Boost from Stereocasting

Broadcasts Will Start This Summer; Set Makers Plan Fall Introductions

NEW YORK, May 18—Most fm broadcasters look upon stereophonic broadcasting as a development that will turn the tide for the medium.

As one station man put it: "Fm is no longer a child. This is the making of fm. If there is a good, concentrated promotion by all facets of the industry, within a year we will see some fine action" on the part of advertisers.

Enthusiasm was sparked last month when the Federal Communications Commission approved the "multiplex" stereophonic system for fm developed by General Electric and Zenith Radio Corp. Broadcasters have the go-ahead to establish the system by June 1. This calls for the simultaneous transmission of two signals on separate bands, producing stereophonic sound when picked up by fm sets equipped to receive both signals.

Some proponents of stereo among fm station men feel the first spurt in the use of the medium by advertisers will come from manufacturers of stereo fm receivers eager to reach that segment of the population already interested in good sound reproduction. And stereo record manufacturers probably will advertise on fm once they are able to demon-

Wright Leaves Own Agency to Join Peitscher, Janda

CHICAGO, May 18—William E. Wright, president of Wright, Campbell & Suitt, has left his agency to join Peitscher, Janda/Associates as a vp and account supervisor.

Seven accounts, which bill an estimated $500,000, moved with Mr. Wright. They include Kraml Dairy, On-Cor Food Products, Kitchen Art Foods Inc., Kostco Co., Pair Schools Inc., Chase Products Co. and Utah Electronics Corp.—all Chicago-area companies.

The future of Wright, Campbell & Suitt, which Mr. Wright said billed $620,000 last year, is not clear, Mr. Wright said. He owns all of the stock in Wright, Campbell which he currently is trying to sell. Mr. Wright said that he left three accounts (billing between $50,000 and $60,000) at the agency he founded 12 years ago.

Mr. Wright denied a report published last week that Marvin Gordon is joining Wright, Campbell as exec vp (AA, May 15). "We have placed some billings for Mr. Gordon, but he has not officially joined the agency," he said.

Peitscher, Janda also announced the acquisition of another account—Speedrack Inc, Skokie, Ill., manufacturer of boltless, adjustable steel storage racks for industrial material-handling warehousing. The account, which bills an estimated $75,000, formerly was handled by John Meck & Staff. #

Haloid Xerox Gives Office Copiers Ads to Papert, Koenig

ROCHESTER, May 18—Haloid Xerox today named Papert, Koenig, Lois Inc., New York, to handle its line of office copiers, effective Oct. 1.

The company had been seeking an agency since its January appointment at Doyle Dane Bernbach was announced, because of a conflict with another DDB client, Polaroid Corp.—which later confirmed an ADVERTISING AGE report that it was going into the copier business.

Papert, Koenig's share of Haloid billings, about $500,000, was the second piece of new business picked up by the shop in less than a week. Last Friday it was tapped by Exquisite Form Industries, a brassiere maker, for its Magic Lady, and Silfskin divisions, worth about $1,000,000 in billings (AA, May 15).

William N. Hesketh, manager of advertising and sales promotion of Haloid, said Papert, Koenig was one of "about a dozen agencies" considered prior to Doyle Dane's brief tenure.

"There was no speculative presentation," Mr. Hesketh stressed. "Haloid does not believe in them. We simply met with prospective agencies, informally. We discussed ideas and found out what the agencies had done."

He said the growth of Haloid's Model 914 office copier necessitated adding a second shop. Hutchins Advertising Co. here—which has had the whole account until now—retains Haloid's Xerographic products—high speed printers, photocopying equipment and supplies, and photographic papers. Billings on this portion were put at more than $250,000.

Papert, Koenig will pick up the tailend of Haloid's calendar-year copier advertising. The agency is in the process of working up a media schedule, Mr. Hesketh said. In the past, Haloid has leaned heavily on magazines to carry the promotional load. Mr. Hesketh also speculated on additional future Haloid business for Papert, Koenig following "research on new products we're busy with right now."

Some time after June 1, the company will introduce a new logo as a result of a name change approved by shareholders on April 18. Xerox Corp. will be the new identity. The new logo is being prepared by Lippincott & Margulies, industrial designer. #

J. I. Case Co. Consolidates Its Account at Geyer

RACINE, WIS., May 19—J. I. Case Co. has consolidated its account at Geyer, Morey, Madden & Ballard by switching its industrial and utility divisions from the Andrews Agency, Milwaukee.

Geyer already had the company's agricultural advertising, which moved into the agency through its merger with Western Advertising, Racine and Chicago, last month (AA, April 3). Case's total billings are in excess of $1,000,000.

Don E. Fricker, manager of advertising and public relations, said Case had considered six other agencies in addition to Geyer. "Consultation with the principals of Geyer revealed to us many advantages we can enjoy from a marketing standpoint. In addition, the western division's close proximity contributed to our decision in its favor." #

Why we were banned on TV

SPRING AIR
"Health Center" Mattresses

Spring Air Goes to Franz from Gourfain

CHICAGO, May 18—Spring Air Co., mattress manufacturer and licensor, has switched its advertising account from Gourfain-Loeff Inc. to Alex T. Franz Inc., effective immediately.

The company said that its national advertising budget for its current fiscal year (Nov. 1, 1960 to Oct. 31, 1961) amounted to $190,000, of which $113,000 is budgeted for magazines, and $77,000 for collateral material. Gourfain-Loeff told ADVERTISING AGE, however, that the Spring Air budget has been reduced and billings have been running only $120,000.

Spring Air, which has 35 licensees throughout the U.S. which make Spring Air mattresses and box springs in addition to their own brands, plans an ad budget for its 1961-'62 year of $250,000, of which $150,000 will go into magazines and $100,000 for collateral materials. The licensees spend an estimated $500,000 yearly.

Spring Air has been seeking a fresh approach to mattress advertising for some time. The Franz agency developed some print ads and radio spots featuring the Spring Air Mattress Madrigal Singers, which apparently sold the company's board of directors.

The new theme prepared by Franz will first appear in four page ads scheduled for September and October issues of Life and The Saturday Evening Post. A group of singers are illustrated in the ad which carries the headline, "Why we were banned on tv."

The body copy reads, in part: "The Spring Air Mattress Madrigal Singers were the greatest act ever to hit tv. They sang lyrical poems about the unique way the Spring Air mattress is built. It's called a 'Health Center' because there's a concentration of special coils in the middle third of the mattress—where 70% of your weight rests."

"Just thinking about these features was enough to put our Madrigal Singers to sleep, right in the middle of their song. Worse, yet, they lulled every audience to sleep, too. No sponsor wanted to follow us on tv."

"It was suggested that, possibly, magazines would be a better place for our message. So here we are. And Spring Airs are in nearby stores. We took the hint. Can you?"

The selection of Franz reunites the agency with Ronald J. Shepherd, exec vp of Spring Air. He formerly was vp and director of sales of Cribben & Sexton Co., which was handled by Franz. He left Cribben & Sexton and Franz later lost the account when the company was sold to Waste King Corp. #

Find Alternative to Mails, Says Congressman to Magazine Industry

Mechanization of P.O. Is Likely to Require 25 Years, Says Rep. Berry

WASHINGTON, May 17—A member of the House Post Office committee suggested today that in their own enlightened self interest, publishers should be energetically exploring ways to get their magazines out of the mail.

The suggestion, from Rep. Robert K. Berry (R., N.Y.), came after spokesmen for Time Inc., and Curtis Publishing Co., outlined hardships caused by rising postal costs. Rep. Berry told them the process of mechanizing the Post Office is going to take at least 25 years, and that it isn't likely to contribute to the reduction of the postal deficit, which now runs nearly $1 billion.

David W. Brumbaugh, exec vp and treasurer of Time Inc., ran into a barrage of committee criticism after he testified that "productivity has been singularly deficient in the Post Office Department compared with the private economy."

Before he could complete his testimony, Republicans interrupted to say they have no intentions of taking any more of this kind of criticism. "For eight years," said Rep. Berry, "we Republicans called into the Post Office very reputable engineering organizations here and abroad, companies like RCA, AMF, and others. Every idea that could be dreamed has been used," he snapped.

Noting that he has had 25 years of experience in industry and has made careful studies of Post Office problems, the congressman told Mr. Brumbaugh: "When you deal with the mechanization of the Post Office you deal with masses you never dreamed of—billions of pieces of mail; 560,000 employees; 20,000 offices.

"We are moving from development engineering to production engineering now," he said. "But the mechanization of the Post Office is going to take 20 to 25 years."

Mr. Brumbaugh and Robert K. Ferrand, vp and director of public relations, Curtis Publishing Co., pointed out that publishers have absorbed 67% increases in rates

California Farm Group Sets Ads to Build Image

Copy Tells Common Interest of Growers, Harried Urban Wives

LOS ANGELES, May 17—Time was when the average farmer would as soon pepper your behind with birdshot as look at you.

Not today, however; the farmer, it seems, is concerned about his public "image."

Witness a newspaper and outdoor campaign currently under way in behalf of the Council of California Growers. The council, an association of farmer associations, was formed last year to give the farmer's side of controversial questions involving agricultural labor.

Lately, however, the council has extended its concern to the public's attitude toward the farmer; hence a series of big-space color ads in California dailies.

The ads, which broke in the Los Angeles Times yesterday, as well as in dailies in half a dozen other cities, is designed, says the copy, "to create a better understanding between the general public and the agricultural communities of California."

"Through these messages, we hope that we can once again establish the relationship we once had. You know, back there when most of us knew someone who lived and worked on a farm. The relationship we should have as partners. The relationship of harmony, friendship and understanding," the copy says.

Although the council declined to give further details on future ad plans, it was learned that about $500,000 has been earmarked for advertising and promotion, to be placed through Agricultural Advertisers, an agency set up by the group, with headquarters in San Francisco. O. W. Fillerup, exec vp of the council, is also head of the agency. #

Rheingold Shifts New England Share to Campbell, Emery

NEW YORK, May 16—A small Boston agency has carved a close-to-$500,000 slice of the Rheingold beer business from the Foote, Cone & Belding account.

Five or six weeks ago, Campbell, Emery, Haughey & Lutkins solicited the New England end of Liebmann Breweries, and yesterday the account was bottled and sealed.

The account represents a big boost in Campbell's billings, which now run something like $2,000,000.

The quick switch surprised Rheingold's long-standing agency, but it was no surprise to the industry. The New England area has been dominated by Jacob Ruppert, with F&M Schaeffer and Narragansett Brewing Co. close behind. Carling Brewing Co. set a trend to local agencies about nine years ago with its appointment of Harold Cabot & Co., Boston, for its New England business.

The decisive factor in Rheingold's decision, a company man said, was a 2,000-word telegram from the agency during the negotiations. The telegram put marketing problems in nutshell form, and Rheingold decided to stake its money on the local shop.

Campbell was founded in 1957. Its principals are former executives of John C. Dowd Agency, Boston. Each has had experience with brewing clients, including Narragansett. Handling Rheingold will be William Haughey, newest member of the agency, who joined two years ago from Ingalls-Miniter-Haughey, now Ingalls Associates. #

Michigan Outdoor Bill Dies

Outdoor advertising in Michigan gained at least a temporary victory when the state legislature allowed the federal highway outdoor poster bill to die without action. Gov. John Swanson, however, told the legislature there still were avenues open to push the bill through before the session ends in June.

Baltimore BBB Reports

The Baltimore Better Business Bureau handled 50,956 cases of inquiries and complaints in 1960, which marked a 5.5% increase over 1959. Instances of questionable advertising investigated by the bureau in 1960 totaled 1,455. Chief category causing advertising complaints was appliances.

American Oil Strides onto National Scene with One Brand for All Units

But Midwest Stations Will Still Carry Indiana Standard Designation

CHICAGO, May 17—American Oil Co. takes its "Big Step" into the national marketing picture next week, striding a mere 11 days behind Humble Oil's nationwide introduction of Enco brand gasoline.

The "Big Step" is American's umbrella phrase covering its introduction into the formerly separate divisions of the parent Standard Oil Co. (Indiana)—American (East and South), Standard (Midwest) and Utah Oil & Refining Co. (Northwest).

A massive all-media advertising campaign will break May 23 to announce the change. D'Arcy Advertising Co. is the agency.

American super premium and regular will replace Standard's Gold Crown and Red Crown brands in the Midwest and Utoco's Ultra-Power brands in the Northwest.

In the East and South, the company will continue to market its unleaded premium gas as Amoco super premium, as well as American regular.

The move is designed to give a common brand symbol to the various Indiana Standard brands. In addition, it will allow for uniform national advertising.

There's a catch, however. In the Midwest, stations will still be known as Standard stations, to protect the Standard brand name. So magazine split runs will be used in national advertising campaigns, inserting Standard for American in the 15-state Midwest marketing area. Color spreads and gatefold inserts in Life and The Saturday Evening Post will comprise the initial magazine campaign. In addition, an institutional program (through MacManus, John & Adams) will also use Look.

The list of newspapers for the "Big Step" campaign includes 800 dailies and 1,200 weeklies, using color where available. Sunday supplements are also scheduled.

In broadcast, American will use 154 tv stations and 330 radio stations. A feature of the tv schedule is a two-minute "spectacular" commercial starring baritone Bill Lee and a chorus of 26 singers and dancers, in a musical number written for the commercial. The song, with variations, will also be used on radio.

Approximately 6,400 outdoor posters will be used in 1,748 cities and towns.

Transportation posters, point of sale pieces and other material are included in the drive.

The American Oil campaign is similar to that of Humble Oil & Refining Co., which broke advertising in much of the nation May 12 to introduce Enco gas (AA, May 1). Humble is the chief operating arm of Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey).

SIGN-ON—American Oil Co. changed 16,000 red-and-black Amoco signs for red-white-and-blue American signs in preparation for nationwide marketing drive. The illuminated plastic signs were designed by Plasti-Line Inc., Knoxville, and manufactured by 14 companies.

Self Preservation (of Ad Manager) Is Urged as Selling Tool for Business Publications

CHICAGO, May 16—Advertising managers must be sold on the importance of selling the importance of advertising to top management, according to J. B. Strenski, president of Attitudes Inc., public relations agency.

"Every time the ad budget is cut, the ad manager's importance is undermined," he told the I.F. Club of Chicago yesterday. "Your challenge is to help those ad manager customers of yours understand the gravity of this statement and do something about it."

Business paper advertising should help ad managers do a good job for their companies and for themselves, Mr. Strenski said. "When ad budgets are cut, neither objective is attained. And, if ad budgets are cut far enough, who needs an ad manager? With no ad manager, who puts milk on the table for the ad manager's kids?"

"This can be a mighty powerful motivation to insure enthusiastic ad manager cooperation in the role of your best salesman, if you utilize it properly," he said.

Salesmen should supply ad managers with materials showing the effectiveness of advertising, to be passed along to top management, he said. He also suggested that salesmen work with the ad managers to invite management people to key industry meetings and publication seminars. #

Norman D. Waters Sets New Co-op Promotion for 'Look'

A new cooperative promotion has been set for the Dec. 5 Look by Norman D. Waters & Associates, a division of Friend-Reiss Advertising, New York. Called "Gift Discoveries," the promotion calls for a color spread featuring a maximum of 12 gift items. Co-sponsors will be accepted by Waters on a "first come" basis, with each advertiser guaranteed exclusivity in its field. Regular Look rates will prevail—but there will be an additional flat charge of $1,875 to cover handling. Quarter-page rate will be $13,750, one-eighth-page $7,500.

The package deal includes a number of merchandising supports for the co-sponsors, among them color reprints, display cards and newspaper mats. A special feature of the promotion is a telephone-answering service. The spread will list telephone numbers that readers can call in the 75 largest U.S. trading areas to find the nearest store carrying the items.

Coca-Cola Keys $1,000,000 Push to 'Float' Motif

ATLANTA, May 16—Coca-Cola Co. will repeat its "Float with Coke" promotion this year, teaming up Coke with ice cream.

The company said the repeat drive stemmed from "popular demand by thousands of outlets from coast to coast."

The campaign, which will have its heaviest impact during June, July and August, features eye-catching photographs of ice cream floating in a glass of Coca-Cola.

The company said "more than $1,000,000" will be spent on the promotion, not counting point-of-sale materials and exposures on the "Ozzie & Harriet Show" (ABC-TV).

"Float with Coke" will be promoted in a nationwide poster schedule, spectacular bulletins at key traffic points, illuminated photomurals in transportation centers and pages in the following magazines: American Girl, Boys' Life, Life, Look, National Geographic, The New Yorker, Reader's Digest and The Saturday Evening Post.

A PAID TESTIMONIAL FROM VICTOR ALESSANDRO FOR KPRC-TV, HOUSTON

You perhaps know how we gently persuade famous people to say nice, sincere-sounding things about KPRC-TV. WE PAY THEM MONEY! Take Victor Alessandro. We approached the conductor of The San Antonio Symphony recently while he was in Houston to guest-conduct the Houston Symphony. He was rehearsing, and at first he mistook us for a music critic and picked up his largest baton. But, we handed him a violin-case full of money and asked him to say something nice about KPRC-TV.

"Television?" he shouted. "Surely you're joking! Television is for children and grown-ups who know no better. Do you mistake me for a politician?"

EDWARD PERRY & CO.
National Representatives

We begged, we pleaded, we implored. Then we filled a bass-fiddle case with money. Dr. Alessandro agreed to watch Channel 2. "Viola!" he cried aloud. "Can this be television? It looks exactly like Mozart, or Beethoven. Why it would indeed be a shame to waste this splendid art on children or unappreciative grown-ups. May I watch a little longer?"

As Dr. Alessandro discovered (and you can, too) — KPRC-TV is the one television produced on purpose to please. KPRC-TV in Houston alone gives you the true, exact flavor of GRADE A television.

No other television looks or sounds or stays pleasant and persuasive like KPRC-TV, because no other television is produced like KPRC-TV.

Every advertising man should always have handy a noose and a bottle of champagne

The difference between advertising triumph and tragedy is often a matter of getting through to the right prospects. No medium quite does it like The Saturday Evening Post. Readers are leaders. And America's readers turn with hungry minds to their favorite magazine each week. Result: The reading weekly gives your ad page millions more repeat exposures to these younger, larger, higher-income families than the picture magazines. And the new Rochester Study indicates that two exposures to the same ad page in The Saturday Evening Post have twice the effect of one on the reader's willingness to buy your brand. Proof that the number-one magazine for reading is your number-one magazine for selling. A votre santé!

New Pepsi Carton, in Houston Shot, Has 12 Full Bottles—That's a Lot

HOUSTON, TEX., May 16—Pepsi-Cola Co. has begun distributing 12-packs in a new carton in about 1,100 stores throughout the Houston area. If it clicks here—and previous test marketing indicated it should—local Pepsi-Cola executives expect the new carton to be distributed throughout the U. S.

The new carton is the company's first 12-pack king-size carton. It displays the Pepsi name in bigger letters than does the present carton design, which squeezes Pepsi-Cola into the same amount of space as the five letters in the new. The name and crown are printed on a white background, which causes them to stand out better than on the pale striped background of the other present design. For good measure, the brown and yellow are brighter, providing more contrast.

For the first time, the complete Pepsi crown is visible when the cartons are stacked endwise.

■ Sales manager Harold Budd, of Pepsi-Cola Metropolitan Bottling Co. of Houston, is given credit for conceiving the new design and working out with parent company executives the practical details.

Victor Kaufman, vp and general manager of the Houston distributor, which is owned by the parent company, is in charge of the project.

The new carton has been test marketed in six stores in various sections of the Houston area. Mr. Budd and Mr. Kaufman reasoned that it should increase turnover if the new carton could induce enough shoppers to choose the 12-pack over the six-pack. "Once they

Pfizer Appoints Grossman, Shifts Brands to Gotthelf

NEW YORK, May 17—Chas. Pfizer & Co. this week named a new marketing director for its ethical drug division and a new agency for its two top proprietary products.

Herbert Grossman

Coming in as director of marketing for Pfizer Laboratories is Herbert Grossman, who is no stranger to the company. A graduate of Brooklyn College of Pharmacy, he was a marketing manager with Pfizer Labs from 1951 to 1957.

Since then he has been director of marketing development for William Douglas McAdams Inc., New York, a Pfizer agency, and director of marketing of the Pharmaceutical Research Center, New York.

Mr. Grossman succeeds Dean Thacker, who was recently transferred to Pfizer's burgeoning international division.

■ On the proprietary front, an area where Pfizer has not had too much success, the family products department appointed Ted Gotthelf Associates, New York, to handle advertising for Bonadettes, a motion sickness pill, and Candettes, a throat lozenge. Both of these products were previously handled by Leo Burnett Co., Chicago, the agency for Pfizer's agricultural division.

Pfizer's family products department has been working with the Gotthelf agency for the past two years. There is one other product now in the active stage—an eye drop. # $9,000,000 Budget . . .

Int'l Shoe Puts 65% of Ad Funds in TV Promotion

St. Louis, May 16—International Shoe Co. is spending $9,000,000 for advertising and promotion, including collateral, this year. Television receives 65% of the budget, A. L. Johnson, director of advertising at the St. Louis headquarters, said.

Of the $9,000,000, about $5,000,000 is handled in St. Louis, where five agencies work on International accounts, and the company directly spends about $1,500,000 (of the $5,000,000) on catalogs, direct mail and dealer helps.

The remaining $4,000,000 represents primarily the advertising expenditure of Savage Shoes, Preston, Ont., plus Florsheim Shoe Co., Chicago. These are International Shoe subsidiaries.

International is using the "Jack Paar Show" (NBC-TV) two nights a week for 30 weeks, and Dick Clark's "American Bandstand" (ABC-TV) three afternoons a week for 39 weeks.

In addition, $1,500,000 is allocated for tv spots on three afternoon shows, with variable local titles. The half-hour cartoon programs reach 90% of International's nationwide children's market, the company believes. Poll Parrot, Weatherbird and Red Goose are children's brands advertised in the spots.

The specialty units, such as the Florsheim company and International's Vitality and Winthrop divisions, are putting all their money in print media, including Sunday supplements. Florsheim, handled by Post & Morr, Chicago, has the biggest schedule in magazines among International Shoe brands. Martin F. Maher is Florsheim's advertising director.

Men's shoes are being advertised in full color pages and some smaller units in Esquire, Life, Look, Newsweek, Playboy, Sports Illustrated and Time.

Holiday, Ladies' Home Journal, McCall's, Redbook and fashion magazines are being used for women's shoes. Parents' Magazine and baby publications carry seasonal ads on children's shoes.

Mr. Johnson said the company can definitely trace results from tv advertising.

"After one season of promoting our teen age shoes on the Dick Clark show, our sales increased 25%," he said. "We do not use print media for our teen shoes," he added.

Because Mr. Clark has also a big women's audience, International now also advertises women's shoes on the "Bandstand," but teen shoes still receive two-to-one emphasis.

"We get dozens of letters every week from our customers who say people come into the stores and ask for the shoes they see on the Paar show," Mr. Johnson also said.

On every tv show used for advertising Red Goose shoes, a plastic golden egg with prizes inside is offered free to youngsters who see their Red Goose dealer. "The only place we featured this egg is on tv spots," Mr. Johnson said, "and we have sold 4,000,000 of these

Hires Introduces New Flavors in Philadelphia Test

PHILADELPHIA, May 18—The Charles E. Hires Co. begins a market test here next Tuesday for Hires orange, grapefruit, grape, cherry cola, ginger ale and lemon-lime sodas in non-returnable bottles.

To make a big impression on this market, Hires has contracted with Shopathon Co., a sales promotion company, to put on virtually a city-wide circus with clowns and entertainers visiting food centers.

In addition, a bus filled with money will travel around the city. Shoppers will be asked to guess how much money is in the bus. The person guessing the figure will win the cash.

To supplement the introduction and test of these new flavors, Hires will open with large space ads in the Philadelphia Bulletin, supplement this with participations on three WFIL-TV popular kiddie shows, and back all of this with spots on stations WIP, WCAU, WPEN and WRCV. Eighty buses will be heavily carded for 30 days.

ADVERTISING AGE learned that the company plans to introduce these new flavors in similar fashion in other major markets until they are distributed nationally. Maxon Inc., New York, is the agency on the account. #

NEW YORK, May 18—A young balladeer named Steve De Pass was the hit of the Radio & Television Executives Society luncheon here yesterday with a musical rendition called the "FCC Blues."

Mr. De Pass appeared at the annual adman's "Jazz Bash" for the benefit of the New York Herald Tribune's Fresh Air fund, and brought the house down with lyrics built around Newton N. Minow's "tv wasteland" speech delivered before the National Assn. of Broadcasters last week (AA, May 15). To the tune of the "Old Gray Mare," Mr. De Pass began:

• Newton N. Minow is a brand new chairman, better beware, man, he's watching the air, man.

Newton N. Minow is a brand new chairman, chairman of the FCC . . .

Shun 'Happy People' Ad Stereotype, Researcher Rockey Tells Rail Admen

Ragsdale Succeeds Kohn as Head of Group; GE Wins Golden Spike

NEW ORLEANS, May 16—"We must get away from the 'happy people stereotype,'" delegates to the 37th annual meeting of the Assn. of Railroad Advertising Managers were told here last week.

Giving this advice was Earnest A. Rockey, vp of research for Gallup & Robinson, Princeton, N. J.

Mr. Rockey advised the railroad ad heads to "switch off the happy people track." He said railroad advertisers—and many others—waste too much space showing carloads of "happy people doing nothing but smiling—and offering nothing for the reader."

Research, he said, has shown that readers will learn the name of a company and be attracted to ads that actually illustrate the services and benefits that that particular company has to offer.

John N. Ragsdale, of Silver Spring, Mo., advertising manager of the Assn. of American Railroads, succeeded Albert L. Kohn, Washington, D. C., general advertising manager of Southern Pacific Co., as president of the association.

John N. Ragsdale

Other new officers of the rail admen's group are G. V. Frederick, Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, 1st vp; G. F. Link, Burlington Line, and J. M. Hagen, Great Northern Line, vps; and P. G. Beach, Union Pacific, treasurer.

Another speaker, H. McKinley Conway Jr., president of Conway Publications, Atlanta, told those attending, "Your industrial development advertising operates in one of the most competitive fields of advertising today." He cited hard sell ads by public utilities, real estate boards, chambers of commerce, state agencies seeking relocation of plants, and other organizations. All of these, he said, are trying to lure new industries or expansion of established companies into their respective areas.

Mr. Conway told the delegates that theirs is a unique problem as far as clarity in identification is concerned. He asked, "For instance, how many potential industries know where the main offices of most lines are located, or that an established line, like the Chesapeake & Ohio, is headquartered in Cleveland, which is not even on the C&O line?"

He also said that the traditional industrial development ad does not seek responses by coupons or clippings and is, in a sense, a teaser or hidden persuader type of ad. In many cases, he continued, only the city along a line where a site is available for potential plants is mentioned in the development ad, without mention of the line's industrial development headquarters.

He gave as his opinion, which agreed with the delegates' consensus, that this type of ad usually is not the decisive factor in a company's decision to relocate or expand in a certain area, but that it is definitely a contributing factor. "With millions of dollars involved in relocation," he said, "it is doubtful that only the ad would be the seller."

A high point in the convention was the award of the annual Golden Spike advertising award to the locomotive and car equipment department of General Electric Co., Erie, Pa.

Accepting the awards were David C. Kaufherr, vp of Gotham-Vladimir Advertising, New York, and L. F. Howard, southern representative on metropolitan transportation, General Electric, Atlanta, representing respectively the locomotive and equipment sections of the department.

The Golden Spike is presented annually to the advertiser outside the railroad industry judged to have made the most outstanding contribution through advertising to a better understanding and appreciation of the American railroads.

The General Electric department's winning entry included newspaper and magazine advertisements submitted by the locomotive section and a television commercial on urban transportation, shown on "General Electric Theater."

Certificates of Merit were awarded to American Car & Foundry division of ACF Industries, New York; Cluett, Peabody & Co., New York; Pullman-Standard, Chicago; and Schweppes (USA) Ltd., New York.

The Marshall Chamber of Commerce and the News Messenger, Marshall, Tex., were recipients of a joint special merit award. #

More Than 300 Already Enrolled for 'Advertising Age' Summer Workshop

Fourth Annual Seminar to Be Held Aug. 1-4 at Palmer House, Chicago

CHICAGO, May 18—More than 300 advertising men and women from the U. S., Canada, Mexico and England already have signed up for participation in the fourth annual Summer Workshop on Creativity in Advertising, sponsored by ADVERTISING AGE.

The workshop will be held at the Palmer House, Chicago, Aug. 1-4. It begins on the evening of Tuesday, Aug. 1, and ends in mid-afternoon Friday, Aug. 4.

Designed to provide an opportunity for the discussion of purely creative advertising ideas and problems dealing with both print and broadcast advertising, the workshop is not a conversion. Instead, it is a hard-working three-day session aimed at mature, knowledgeable advertising people, giving them an opportunity to learn what is new, to get together with acknowledged leaders in the field, to swap ideas and know-how with other creative people, and to participate in creative experiments and demonstrations.

For example, six well known advertising men will run simultaneous sessions on Wednesday afternoon, divided into two parts, so that all workshop participants can attend at least two sessions. In one session they will review and analyze current advertising; in the other they will show a complete campaign of which they are especially proud, or which solves an unusual problem, and will explain the thinking behind it.

These sessions—small and in-

were generally skeptical in the early days of the drive, and because the total market still was depressed, he said, the February and March figures were not spectacular. But April sales were up 41% while the rest of the industry was down 21%.

The late spurt in sales has given Chrysler a 1961 calendar year increase of 7%, while the rest of the industry is off 20%.

■ Basically, all the "2964" ads are the same, featuring the price in the largest type size in the layout. A cut of the Newport also is displayed prominently.

With the exception of a few ads for the Imperial and the limited production Chrysler 300G, all the division's money since Feb. 10 has gone into the "2964" campaign, according to James Wichert, director of advertising for the division. This has been broken down

Laughna Leaves Chrysler

DETROIT, May 19—Robert P. Laughna has resigned as vp-marketing of Chrysler Corp. to accept a post as president and chief executive officer of Commercial Carriers Inc., an automobile haul-away company. Mr. Laughna's marketing functions at Chrysler, including corporate advertising, business research, market planning and analysis, have been transferred to the automotive sales group under E. C. Quinn, vp. Mr. Laughna came to Chrysler in 1956 from Studebaker-Packard. He was made a vp in April, 1958, and took over the marketing post in December, 1960. Commercial Carriers hauls 7% of the Chrysler cars.

approximately 60% for newspapers, 20% for magazines, 12% for broadcast, and 4% each for direct mail and outdoor.

The first ad (1,500 lines) ran Feb. 10 in nearly 2,000 newspapers in 800 markets. This was followed with newspaper ads in up to 2,000 newspapers on Feb. 20, March 6 and 20, April 3 and 24, and May 8. Further schedules call for a newspaper ad May 29 and twice a month after that.

■ "But the thing that added credence to the newspaper ads," according to Mr. Wichert, "was the schedule in national consumer magazines." The newspaper ads were backed up with pages in Life Feb. 17, March 17 and April 7; The Saturday Evening Post, Feb. 25, March 11 and 25, April 15 and May 13; and Look for April 25.

Future schedules call for further insertions in The Saturday Evening Post and Life throughout the model year.

In addition, Chrysler sent out a mailing in late February to 1,285,000 registered owners of Chryslers, De Sotos, Buicks and Oldsmobiles.

Radio and television saturations were used in late February in major markets, with the price featured heavily in all spot copy.

Mr. Briggs said that, to the best of his knowledge, this is the first time an automobile manufacturer has used a single price in a national ad. "Others have talked in generalities," he explained, "such as 'lower than ever' or 'lowest in the field,' but we believe we are the first to go all out like this."

■ One reason Chrysler has been able to do it, he explained, is the price labeling law, which now makes it mandatory for an automobile manufacturer to list the suggested retail price on the window of a new car.

"Without this," he said, "we would not be able to administer the campaign. With the label on the car, a customer can walk into a showroom and see for himself."

Mr. Briggs said that the Newport, a new model this year in the Chrysler lineup, currently is accounting for about 64% of production, and will finish the year with about 58% of the total Chrysler output. But he pointed out that the "2964" campaign has helped the other Chrysler models as well. New Yorker sales, for example, are running ahead of 1960.

While the Newport four-door sedan, with manual transmission, is priced about $200 below last year's lowest price Windsor model, Mr. Briggs emphasized that this is not a "stripped" model in the usual sense of the word.

■ Mr. Briggs said that product planning for the Newport began back in 1955, when division officials realized that the public considered the Chrysler an overpriced car. "We had two things going against us at that time," he said. "We were actually high priced, and the public thought we were priced even higher."

The Newport was introduced in October, 1960 with a suggested retail price of $2,964, same as now. But the big promotion could not get under way at that time for several reasons.

One, initial production of the model was not high enough to stock all the dealers. Two, the industry market was down during the winter, and this was considered a bad time for an all-out campaign. And three, Chrysler officials did not want to launch the campaign until it could be integrated on a national-local basis.

■ But a three-city test was conducted last fall to determine the effectiveness of the "2964" approach. Using dailies in New Orleans, Phoenix and Des Moines, Young & Rubicam, the Chrysler-Imperial agency, ran the same basic ad that broke nationally Feb. 10. Y&R researchers found that nearly half the visitors to local Chrysler showrooms had seen the price ad, and many even brought copies of the ad in with them.

"We learned two basic points in this test period," stated Peter Lowcher, merchandising manager in Y&R's Detroit office. "We learned that the ad helped people to position the Chrysler in its proper place alongside competition, and we learned that the $2,964 price would bring them into the showroom."

One of the key points of the whole national campaign, according to Joseph G. Standart Jr., Y&R vp and head of the Detroit office, was the "no junior edition" pitch used in all the ads. "We wanted to be sure that people understood that the Newport was a full-size car, and not a compact."

Chrysler plans to continue its "2964" advertising campaign for the remainder of the model year, and a similar approach no doubt will be used next year. Pointing to the rising sales figures, Mr. Briggs added that Chrysler production schedules have been increased five times since February, and that current plans call for the division to build out the model year without a shutdown.

And while there have been other factors contributing to Chrysler's unseasonal success ("It's as good a car as we've ever built"), Mr. Briggs admitted that "we couldn't have done it without the '2964'." ■

TV Nets Lock Up Schedules for Fall

one of the hoariest of the situation comedies; "I've Got A Secret," which lost R. J. Reynolds when its old time spot was pre-empted for General Foods; "CBS Reports," one of tv's finest public affairs productions; "Ichabod"; "Father Knows Best" re-runs; "The Defenders," a father-son lawyer team; and "Dobie Gillis."

Another 'Untouchables'

NBC, which has embraced segmented selling, is in a much stronger sales position than it was this time last year, particularly on Sunday night. But by the network's count, there is still about a third of its nighttime schedule to be sold. The price of most NBC minutes is about $30,000.

"The Untouchables" has created a sensation on ABC and is sold out for fall despite recurrent protests by various groups, which don't like its violence, its treatment of law enforcement officials or its featuring of Italian gangsters. So NBC will counter with "Gain's 100," the story of a former gangland lawyer turned FBI-man to track down leading criminals. Only one minute weekly has been sold on this show.

■ As if there aren't enough westerns, "Wells Fargo" has been stretched to an hour for the coming season. On the sold side of the ledger: About two-and-one-half minutes. The returning "Outlaws" has about two minutes sold. "The Detectives," starring Robert Taylor, had a good record as a half-hour show on ABC; minutes are available for $28,000 on NBC's hour version of this one. The network chose feature movies as a way of filling two hours on Saturday night. One hour remains to be sold.

Other NBC shows with partial sponsor-wanted signs: "87th Precinct," a New York detective series; "Thriller," a returnee; "Laramie"; "Dick Powell Show"; "Carnival Time"; "Dinah Shore"; and "Tall Man."

ABC and Minutes

ABC, king of participation selling, has a good many pieces of show available. Added this week to the list of one-hour programs was the "Steve Allen Show," returning after a year's absence. Timex and Pepsi-Cola have bought part of this program; about half is still available.

Other ABC programs that can take more business for the fall season: "Maverick" re-runs; "Bus Stop," a new series based on the hit play; "Adventures in Paradise"; "Cheyenne"; "Surfside Six"; "Ben Casey"; "Bugs Bunny"; "Ozzie & Harriet"; "Roaring 20s"; "Leave It to Beaver"; "Corrupters"; "The Racer"; and "The Hathways."

■ George Polk, Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn vp, said a lot of fall network time is available because "there are only so many participation dollars around for television, and now all the networks are bidding for those same dollars" with no wide choice of program types to entice the advertiser.

"The networks have programmed hour shows against hour shows, hoping to knock out competition," he continued. "I don't think it's going to accomplish the purpose. So next season, we may see an upheaval in programming philosophy." ■

Baltimore Chevy Dealers Ask Local Sunpaper Rates

BALTIMORE, May 19—A committee of 10 Baltimore Chevrolet dealers and their advertising agency today asked publishers of the Baltimore Sunpapers to accept dealer new car ads at local lineage rates.

In their presentation to the newspaper executives, the dealers stressed the growing trend of metropolitan newspapers to grant local rates to new-car dealers. They said increased advertising for new cars would be of particular importance to Baltimore, which has steel mills and a major Chevrolet assembly plant.

In his opening remarks, Gerold Hoken, president of Kapplin & Hoken, agency for the dealers, stated, "The committee feels that the Sunpaper policy of charging legitimate automobile retailers the national rate to advertise new cars is discriminatory and unfair, detrimental to the city's economy and harmful to the business interests of the Sunpapers."

■ Elaborating on the committee's position, James Kapplin, vp of the agency, pointed out, "As a merchant selling direct to the general public, the automobile retailer is in competition with every other retailer . . . for a share of the consumer dollar."

"However," Mr. Kapplin continued, "the auto retailer has been singled out to pay the national rate."

"To match the other retailers in size or frequency of advertising, the automobile retailer must spend three times more money—a sure road to bankruptcy in this era of rising costs, profit squeezes, and stiff competition," Mr. Kapplin said.

Citing figures comparing Baltimore to Washington, a market 40 miles away, where all dailies have been accepting new-car advertising from dealers at local rates since 1957, the presentation pointed out that although Washington has a population only 5% larger than Baltimore, Washington auto sales are 30% to 50% larger than Baltimore's. Washington's auto sales per capita are more than 30% higher than Baltimore's.

■ The presentation also compared Washington and Baltimore daily newspaper new car dealer and factory lineage, showing that Washington dailies enjoy almost four times more new car display lineage than the Baltimore dailies. ■

The department's plans call for separate accounts for advertising and for public relations, Mr. Ruder says. (Ruder & Finn, New York pr organization, will not be among the contestants for the public relations account, he said.)

As it was approved by the House yesterday, the tourism program follows the lines recommended by Commerce Secretary Luther Hodges. The program will involve $3,000,000 in the year starting July 1, and slightly over $5,000,000 in subsequent years.

■ Actual opening of the competition for advertising and public relations agencies has been held up pending the resolution by Congress of some of the technical differences between authorization bills passed by the Senate and House. No fundamental issues are involved, however. As soon as the final congressional stumbling block has been removed, the Commerce Department will notify agencies and public relations companies about the selection procedure. While the competition will be wide open, only agencies which are equipped to operate effectively in widely scattered parts of the world will stand a chance.

The basic blueprint for the tourism program, worked up for the department by Walter Johnson, vp of Interpublic Inc., calls for government-operated tourism promotion offices in the United Kingdom, Germany, France, Australia, Japan and either Brazil or Venezuela, with roving travel representatives in a number of other areas. The ad drive, utilizing about half the total budget for the tourism operation, would concentrate in the 12 most promising markets: United Kingdom, Germany, France, Venezuela, Japan, Australia, Brazil, Colombia, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium and Switzerland (AA, April 17).

■ Mr. Johnson's plan emphasized the importance of a local approach in each market where the advertising program operates. "Our program must be designed to appeal to each nationality along pre-tested lines, so that we will know that our advertising, promotion and direct selling in these markets will be productive within the size of the market itself," he wrote.

In this respect, the list of prospective agencies would include agencies that operate their own branch offices in these markets, plus agencies which have network or affiliation agreements with offices in the overseas markets. One estimate indicated that somewhere between 15 and 20 agencies may meet the basic criteria for participating in the competition.

■ The actual selection of the agency will be made by a committee of executives in the department. No speculative presentations will be considered. Each agency will be examined in terms of its experience and resources. Finalists will be invited to appear before the selection committee.

When the program is in full swing, the tourism office will be spending about $2,500,000 for advertising. In addition, it has roughed out a budget of about $835,000 for sales promotion; $205,000 for editorial promotion; $125,000 for research; $50,000 for visitor satisfaction, as well as other sums for travel centers, roving representatives, and the operation of the small Washington headquarters office. ■

Dishonest Ads Move Consumers to Make 'Translations' for Self-Protection: Shepard

CHICAGO, May 16—Disappointing experience with dishonest advertising has led consumers to develop "protective translations," to look for false fronts and to discount many ads, Albert Shepard, president of Motivation Dynamics, Mohegan Lake, N.Y., said at the American Psychiatric Assn.'s convention here last week.

Speaking to a small group on the ethical implications of mass persuasion, Mr. Shepard expressed regret that North American society rewards and reinforces, by its response, advertising that irritates; and penalizes marketers whose ads are in better taste.

He cited advertising for Dristan, Anacin and Arrid as examples of irritating promotion that consumers respond to. Research has shown, he said, that this advertising is successful, in spite of its being offensive to many.

Among other "troublesome trends" that he had noted, Mr. Shepard mentioned trivial exploitation in advertising of significant events. He criticized as a tenuous tie-in a Shell Oil ad capitalizing on the recent Project Mercury achievement (AA, May 15), and the proximity of "vulgar" constipation remedy commercials to news announcements of paramount national importance.

■ Mr. Shepard said he was ashamed, as an American, of a commercial following a reading of President Kennedy's ringing reply to Nikita Khrushchev, on the latter's threat in the Cuban crisis. The commercial began, "Have you been bothered by embarrassing urgency . . ."

He also objected to efforts directed to small children, trying to sell them expensive toys.

Mr. Shepard had high praise for some "giant companies" that have learned that deceitful manipulation does not pay. For many, he said, conspicuous truthfulness has paid off.

■ Dallas Smythe, research professor of the University of Illinois Institute of Communications Research, speaking before the same group, said that the first duty of mass media in the U.S. is to survive as commercial enterprises and to educate readers and listeners to loyal consumership of advertised goods and services.

Prof. Smythe said the choice for broadcasters, especially, is between self-restraint in profit seeking or governmental restraint. #

The Editorial Viewpoint . . .

Doing Is Better Than Talking

It is encouraging to see the advertising business turning more and more to the notion that the best way to improve our image is to improve our advertising.

All of us have known this all along. But it has been easier and more popular to try to shout down those who pointed to the faults of advertising than to accept some personal responsibility for those faults, and to try to do something about them.

The other day Ernie Jones, president of MacManus, John & Adams, pointed out again that advertising ethics, business ethics and media ethics are every adman's responsibility, and that we must all do our part toward maintaining public faith by deeds rather than words.

A couple of weeks ago, Art Tatham of Tatham-Laird, speaking of the Four A's projected public relations program, advanced one suggestion that we found highly intriguing:

"I think an extremely interesting pamphlet or booklet might be produced under the sponsorship of responsible advertisers and agencies to tell the public how to deal with irresponsible advertising," he said. "Such a booklet, bearing the stamp of advertising groups, and making the point that responsible, honest advertisers are more eager than anyone else to see that no one is misled or confused by advertising, might be one of the finest public relations efforts we could make."

The advertising which the Cleveland Advertising Club broke in Cleveland newspapers last week fits Mr. Tatham's prescription almost to the proverbial T. A simple all-type ad under the headline, "What do you think of advertising?" the copy was equally simple:

"If you're like most of us, you depend on advertising—perhaps more than you realize—to keep informed of good buys in the stores, of new products and services that can save you time and money.

"But occasionally you see a 'bad ad'—an advertisement or commercial that offends you, insults your judgment or attempts to mislead you.

"These few bad ads offend us in advertising even more than they do you. We know that honesty and good taste build good business.

"Now we want you to be an important part of the 'Cleveland Plan' for maintaining integrity and good taste in advertising. Here's how . . .

"If you see or hear any advertising you believe is misleading or offensive, let us know about it. Coupons at the bottom of this page can be cut out and kept handy. Or, simply send us a note giving details."

Some will fear this open plea for criticism. But thoughtful admen will welcome it as a sincere attempt to help keep advertising clean and acceptable. And so, we are sure, will most thoughtful members of the critical public.

The Minow-Dixon Axis

Well, the honeymoon is over, as far as the advertising business, broadcasting and Washington are concerned.

If there were those who felt that FCC Chairman Newton Minow was not really going to adopt a harsh line toward broadcasting and its foibles, they were amply disabused at the NAB convention. And if there were those who thought that FTC Chairman Paul Rand Dixon was not going to go his own "new" way with the FTC, they too are now disabused.

Mr. Minow really shook up the broadcasters. No one has talked to them like this since the dear dead days when the then FTC chairman, James Lawrence Fly, stirred the breezes in the ballroom of the Jefferson Hotel in St. Louis with his charge that the National Assn. of Broadcasters, whose convention he was at that moment addressing, was like mackerel in the moonlight—"it both shines and stinks."

Broadcasters almost universally resented Mr. Minow's remarks—not so much what he said, as "the way he said it." And spokesmen for the broadcasting industry and others have rushed into the breach crying "censorship." At the same time, spokesmen for advertisers, some obviously enjoying the broadcasters' momentary discomfiture, rushed into print with praise for the Minow stand and harsh words for broadcasters and particularly for the networks.

They are both wrong. No one who considers the problem calmly can doubt for an instant that program content must be considered by the FCC in deciding whether the airwaves are being used properly. Over-all programming standards must be taken into account by the regulatory agency, and we are convinced that they can be taken into account without indulging in censorship.

And advertisers who now blame all the ills of broadcasting on the networks and stations are conveniently forgetting their unwillingness—by and large—to buy anything but rating numbers, without regard to quality.

Broadcasting is a mass medium and must cater to mass tastes, and it has done a far better job than Mr. Minow gave it credit for, but it would be a brave soul indeed who would argue that it cannot improve its level a mite without alienating all its listeners. The tongue-lashing the FTC chairman delivered could help greatly in reversing the downward cycle which has been increasingly noticeable lately.

Gladys the beautiful receptionist

"They told the art director he'd have to design an album cover for Media Records."

What They're Saying . . .

That Well-Scrubbed Image

Currently, the word "image" is in style, and business men rush to the mirror to see what kind of an impression they are making on the public. Sometimes they are more concerned with the image than the fact.

Public relations advisors will counsel management on the good image that can be created in community relations by a progressive, cooperative attitude on such issues as local housing, smoke abatement, water supply, or the bad image created by ugly buildings, labor disputes, or tax protests. But what about the blank image created by the less-than-candid desire of the management that seeks anonymity in a community or an industry? Worse than a bad image is the vague, faceless image of the enterprise of "neuter gender," whose motives and policies are concealed in silence.

Children make faces in the mirror and sometimes frighten themselves in the process. When a business gets self-conscious about the face it is making before citizens, customers, employes, and stockholders, it might be wise to stop playing make-believe and try being natural, with all its warts and beauty spots equally visible. The personality of a business is reflected in the lives of the people it influences, as well as in the attitude of its management and the nature and quality of its product.

When a company "loses face" because of poor labor policies, shoddy products and services, or dishonored traditions, no borrowed or assumed mask is going to cover up its guilt or folly. The face that a company creates is reflected in the eyes of the consumer who appraises the product or service, and he doesn't worship any false image whether it is brazen, steel, aluminum, or plastic. He looks at the translucent facade of management and sees the conscience at work, for no mask can conceal its meaning or intention. The true likeness comes from the light within. No individual or group of individuals can disguise it, distort it, or improve it.

But if we keep the corporate face clean, there will be no need for cosmetics. Enlightened management prefers to scrub with plain soap and water.

Rough Proofs

When Chairman Minow of the FCC cracked the whip at the convention of the NAB, the cracker sounded to the broadcasters very much like "license renewal."

"British admen may set standards authority," a story from the tight little isle reports.

They're a couple of jumps ahead of developments in the U.S.

"Remington breaks heavy ad drive on skin health," says a report in the world's greatest advertising journal.

Of course a few kind words for the Remington Roll-a-matic are included.

The 26 state farm papers which have organized a bureau of advertising are expected to borrow a leaf from the newspapers' book, "All business is local."

The Baltimore Sunpapers are promoting the many advantages of "Dynamic Baltimore," helped not a little by the dynamic rise in recent seasons of the high-flying Baltimore Orioles.

Anticipating possible future competition, Great Lakes Steel Co. is already beating the drums in behalf of its favorite product as a material for automobile bumpers against that bumptious young upstart, aluminum.

Gamble-Skogmo's efforts to buy control of General Outdoor may not be successful, but in the meantime its offer to shareholders has added something like $10 million to the value of the company's stock.

"Who's watching who?" asks ABC-TV, which is perfectly willing to disregard grammatical purists in favor of the easy colloquialism.

"Account group, not media department, called key spot in agencies," the story says.

This is a secret busy account men have been trying to keep from the reps for quite a while now.

A column by Robert Newcomb and Marge Sammons on "The Care & Feeding of Stockholders" in AA was read with interest by nervous management men confronted frequently at annual meetings by needling share owners.

The recent demise of Salesweek, the experts say, had very little to do with the fact that the magazine appeared once a month instead of weekly.

"What do you think of advertising?" the Cleveland Advertising Club asked newspaper readers.

They'll probably say it's too bad all tv commercials aren't as entertaining as "Mr. Clean."

Sell the medium in the pre-decision stage, Al Stanford suggests as the proper policy.

That's why media advertising bureaus were born.

Among the Big Three magazines, LOOK gained far more circulation during this period than did the other two magazines combined.

The Big Three magazines concentrate this readership in households that are the best customers for goods and services—households that represent "The Profitable Difference" to advertisers. This quality coverage is a magazine plus.

As America's Big Three magazines grow bigger year after year, they play an increasingly significant role in the lives of the American people. The printed word imparts believability. Their prestige commands respect. The combination makes it possible for them to inform, to entertain, to move people to thought and action in a way that is unmatched by any other medium of communications.

J. Colonna Bros. Uses Namesake in Push for New Lines

NEW YORK, May 16—It was Colonna, the comic, talking for Colonna, the company (no relation) here.

The saucer-eyed efforts of comedian Jerry Colonna have been enlisted in an ad drive by J. Colonna Bros., North Bergen, N. J., as the company begins expanding its marketing of grated cheese and flavored bread crumbs—and introduces what it believes is the nation's first low-calorie spaghetti sauce.

Mr. Colonna is appearing on WNBC-TV 26 times a week, via filmed minutes, 20-second, and 10-second spots. The accent is on a grated cheese blend of Romano, Sardo, and Parmesan, and the bread crumbs' cheese-herbs-spice formula—and, of course, the name Colonna.

Newspaper ads for the two products have been 600-line and 249-line insertions, placed throughout the Northeast and in Florida by the Colonna agency, Gardner Advertising Co. The Philadelphia ad mix has had a twist: Colonna has alternated its lineage in dailies with spot radio on WRCV disc jockey shows.

Some concern by Colonna and Gardner preceded the low-calorie sauce push. "We recognized the danger of folks having a subconscious feeling that low-cal products are tasteless," said an agency source. "That's why we stress: 'The only difference is in your figure.'" He said the keep-slim theme would remain, initially, and that later Mr. Colonna's talents would be called on for this product, as well.

Thus far, Colonna (the company) has launched its low-calorie sauce campaign only in Connecticut, with 249-line and 1,000-line ads, and has put out a few New York test feelers. Copy theme is, "Let us buy your first jar," as consumers are invited to get reimbursed by sending in coupons from newspaper ads, or from shelf-talker cards in supermarkets or independent grocers.

The company has budgeted about $75,000 for its initial sauce promotion, and $125,000 for the grated cheese and bread crumb push. #

Flintkote Offers Screwdriver in Push for Building Wares

NEW YORK, May 16—A six-piece, 39¢ screwdriver set figures prominently in the $500,000 advertising plans of Flintkote Co.

Flintkote, via McCann-Marschalk, has just started to push the consumer end of its dealer traffic-building item with a four-color "one shot" page in Life. The ad offers a magnetized, amber-handled screwdriver set ("$1.19 value for 39¢"), available at building material and flooring dealers who carry Flintkote products.

Life readers are told to watch for dealers' names in their local newspapers. To this end, Flintkote has scheduled 1,000-line insertions—carrying anywhere from five to 80 listings—in 150 major metropolitan markets.

Flintkote has tacked on a sales-leader gimmick to help dealers hammer out more sales: Screwdriver buyers will be asked to fill out a simple, three-question form: (1) Do you own your own home? (2) Are you interested in remodeling? (3) If so, what kind?"

In addition to the screwdriver promotion, the $500,000 figure covers Flintkote's builder promotion drive, kicked off April 22 in The Saturday Evening Post and continued in the fall with four-color spreads in Better Homes & Gardens, plus a dealer schedule in Building Materials Merchandiser, Building Products, and Building Supply News; and a builder campaign in House & Home and the Journal of Homebuilding, published by the National Assn. of Home Builders.

Flintkote's total budget was put at about $3,000,000, including literature, exhibits and sales promotion for all of the company's divisions. Fred Gardner Co. handles the Insulrock division and Sidney Clayton & Associates, Chicago, has the Van Packer division. #

Grit helps you catch your sales limit in 16,000 small towns

If you're angling for national sales, remember this:

The metropolitan-oriented mass magazines may give you adequate coverage in big cities . . . but, relatively speaking, in hard-to-reach small towns you barely get your bait back.

This is why you need Grit. For Grit goes each week to 16,000 small towns coast to coast, reaches a primary audience of some 850,000 families. A majority of those families live in towns of 2500 or fewer, a bare tenth of 1% in cities of 1,000,000 or more.

This is how Grit helps correct the metropolitan bias of the major mass magazines on your schedule and provide the balanced national coverage you must have for total marketing success. And all this at space costs so low that you can actually maintain a major advertising effort in Grit for something like $2 per town per year.

That, we think, makes Grit a whale of a buy!

for 20 Mule Team

LOS ANGELES, May 16—U. S. Borax & Chemical Co. has launched a saturation tv campaign to promote 20 Mule Team borax as the ideal additive to any household laundry detergent.

The campaign, which the company said is the largest in Borax history, will include commercials on "Death Valley Days" in 130 markets, plus commercials on five daytime shows on an NBC-TV network of over 165 stations. The daytime programs, which will be supported with a $200,000 budget, include the "Jan Murray Show," "Loretta Young Theater," "From These Roots," "Make Room for Daddy," and "Young Doctor Malone."

In addition, Borax will invest $257,000 in a supplementary tv spot campaign in 85 markets. The company said the total dollar value of its ad schedule runs to $877,000.

The Borax push is calculated to persuade housewives to use 20 Mule Team with any laundry detergent. "Detergent alone doesn't give you all the cleaning power your machine can deliver," says the copy. "Add 20 Mule Team borax and you boost detergent power—put more cleaning power in your machine."

■ On the merchandising front, the "Team Mate" promotion will be backed by two-color spreads in May and June issues of Chain Store Age, Food Topics, Progressive Grocer and Supermarket News. Extensive point of purchase material will also be used.

New Wisconsin Law Requires Full Price in 'Bonus' Sale Ads

Wisconsin Gov. Gaylord Nelson has signed a bill designed to protect consumers against misleading advertising in "bonus," combination or tie-in sales. The measure, which was drafted at Gov. Nelson's request, makes mandatory full information on a package offer, including the total price.

A merchant, under former law in Wisconsin, was able to advertise the sale of a product for 1¢ with the purchase of another item. The price of the latter item did not have to be stated, however. The new law requires that the total price be advertised.

Ex-Cuba Adman, JWT
Exec, Dies in Lima

LIMA, PERU, May 16—Augusto Godoy, 51, who operated one of Cuba's largest advertising agencies for 20 years, died here May 6 of a heart attack.

Mr. Godoy fled from Havana last year, after the Castro government had nationalized most of the advertising business. Since January, he had been manager of the J. Walter Thompson Co. office here.

Mr. Godoy, who was born in Lima, went to Cuba in the early 1930s and entered the advertising field. He later came to the U.S. to study marketing at New York University.

Returning to Cuba in 1939, Mr. Godoy became manager of Studios Valls, the country's oldest advertising agency, and then established his own shop in partnership with Goar Mestre. The agency operated for a number of years as Godoy & Cross, and most recently as Godoy & Godoy. Mr. Godoy's brother, Carlos, was in the business with him.

■ The Godoy agency served as J. Walter Thompson's correspondent agency in Cuba for 18 years.

Mr. Godoy was well known in the U.S., having been active in the International Advertising Assn. He was a regional vp of the IAA and was a member of the honorary committee for the fourth European Congress of the IAA, scheduled for Madrid next September. He also was a past president of the Cuban Assn. of Advertising Agencies.

CARMEL SNOW

NEW YORK, May 16—Carmel Snow, 73, chairman of the board of Harper's Bazaar and one of the great fashion editors, died in her sleep at her home here May 8, apparently of a heart attack. Born in Dublin, Mrs. Snow was brought by her mother to the U.S. in 1895 when she was seven. She joined Vogue as a fashion assistant in 1921. In 1932, Mrs. Snow rocked the fashion world when she switched to Vogue's rival, Harper's Bazaar. At Harper's Bazaar, the pert, petite Mrs. Snow reigned with birdlike briskness for 25 years, shaping the magazine into an authoritative voice for the arts as well as fashion.

She introduced photography to fashion. She went to Paris and brought back Alexey Brodovitch to be her art director. She sought out and encouraged many of today's well known photographers, giving them their first big chance in magazines and bringing them to the attention of advertisers.

BURKHARDT C. NEBO JR.

NEW YORK, May 16—Burkhardt C. Nebo Jr., 55, a vp of Haire Publishing Co., died May 13 in Lawrence Hospital, Bronxville, following a recent heart attack. Mr. Nebo joined the company in 1932 as a salesman in Pittsburgh, where he later became manager. Named a vp in 1957, he was transferred to New York. At his death he was publication manager of Giftwares & Home Fashions. Mr. Nebo was a member of the merchandising paper committee of Associated Business Publications.

NORA H. GOLDEN

ATLANTIC CITY, May 16—Nora H. Golden, 72, retired advertising woman, died in Atlantic City Hospital May 3. Prominent in advertising in the first quarter of the century, she started her career with Ladies' Home Journal Patterns, then joined Conde Nast on the then new Vanity Fair and Vogue and later became ad manager of Lane Bryant. In the 1920s, she was ad manager of the Staten Island Daily Advance. She entered the agency business as one of the founders of the old Myers & Golden, New York. She retired in the late 1930s. In private life, she was Mrs. John J. Field.

W. S. MacDONALD

TORONTO, May 16—W. S. MacDonald, 41, manager of the creative department of James Lovick & Co., died of a heart attack May 10. A direct salesman before entering the agency field, he has also held senior positions with McKim Advertising, Walsh Advertising Co. and Young & Rubicam. ■

Agrico Line Is Consolidated at Marsteller Shop

Agency Doesn't See Addition in Conflict With Industrial Concept

New York, May 16—The story was still unfolding this week of how the $500,000 turf and garden consumer products accounts of American Agricultural Chemical Co. will move June 6 from M. L. Grant Inc. to Marsteller, Rickard, Gebhardt & Reed.

News of the prospective switch (AA, May 1) was unearthed by ADVERTISING AGE the same day the Marsteller agency wound up its 10th birthday celebration here by saying it had nipped consumer account ambitions in the bud.

The move will strip away about one-third of M. L. Grant's over-all billings (estimated at $1,500,000), and give Marsteller the rest of American's business. Marsteller has handled American's Agrico line of farm fertilizers and industrial chemicals (also billing about $500,000) since July, 1957. The turf and garden portion is sold via the Agrico label, as well as a new Homestead brand which bowed last year.

Marvin L. Grant, president of the losing agency, admitted the loss was a "big bite," and chalked it up to "the time-honored problem of a small agency doing business with a giant."

■ Since M. L. Grant took on Agrico in 1955, American's volume in this category grew from about $1,500,000 to more than $6,000,000, another source said. At the same time, the Agrico consumer budget rose from $125,000 to $500,000.

The Grant-American split has been in the offing since early March, when the company gave the agency a 90-day notice, ADVERTISING AGE learned.

■ The M. L. Grant shop could offer no reason for its dismissal. Mr. Grant said that about the first week in March he was summoned by American's advertising manager, Richard C. Ehlers, and told that his agency no longer had the account and was given no explanation.

"We thought there was a strong feeling between American and ourselves," Mr. Grant said. "American is the kind of company that is anxious to grow—and I can't recall our serving a more pleasant account."

An ironic turn of events shifted all Agrico billings to Marsteller, according to an M. L. Grant source. In 1960, he said, Grant had been asked by American's top management if it was interested in taking over the whole account, i.e., the Agrico farm and chemical products advertising handled by Marsteller.

■ Grant quietly boned up on the subject, then told American that it wasn't wise for all of Agrico to be in one house. Grant's reasoning was that it was not set up to do the specialized industrial tasks required.

Queried on the anniversary dicta about the pitfalls of an industrial agency going into the consumer field, William A. Marsteller, chairman of the board of the agency, explained:

"By consumer advertising, we mean impulse items—not a situation where a salesman is employed to assist the customer, or where the item requires explanation. We will not accept such products as foods, cosmetics, cigarets, or supermarket items."

Mr. Marsteller said it is not unusual for "consumer advertising to be handled by us for products like Delta power tool division of Rockwell Mfg. Co.—which we began working on even before our agency was formed."

He suggested that all discussion on the Agrico consumer switch be handled by American, which officially sidestepped all queries. A client source, however, confirmed that the company wanted a single-agency setup but added: "Our parting with M. L. Grant is amicable. It did a pretty good job. There was no dissatisfaction with the agency."

■ M. L. Grant's Agrico billing, it was understood, was about $375,000 in media and $125,000 in production and collateral fees on a capitalized basis.

American Agricultural has marketed turf and garden supplies as far west as Minnesota, Kansas and Iowa. It has been selling Agrico lawn food, weed killers, crabgrass and pest control products, and about 10 different lawn fertilizers.

About a year ago American introduced a new fertilizer line under the Homestead label, "designed strictly for the mass market." Distribution has been via supermarkets, variety stores, and discount houses, with packaging ranging from 5 lb. to 50 lb. sizes. Another American product has been a fertilizer spreader, which has retailed for about $14.95.

The company's total sales were put at $110,000,000. #

O'Connor Urges Plumbers to Wake Up, Advertise

GALLEN HALL, PA., May 16—Because plumbing manufacturers and sellers considered their products essential to the home and "saved" the money that should have been invested in promotion, more aggressive manufacturers selling less essential products "merchandised the 'plus market' right out from under the plumbing industry."

Walter G. O'Connor, president of Walter G. O'Connor Co., Harrisburg agency, made this analysis at the annual convention of the Pennsylvania Assn. of Plumbing Contractors here.

"The whole plumbing-heating-cooling industry has been hiding its light under a bushel," he said.

The price of indifference has been high, Mr. O'Connor said. He quoted an executive in the industry as saying that 42,500,000 homes have one or more tv sets while 1,000,000 fewer homes have bathrooms.

If "his and her" accessories are common in homes, if "twin this and twin that" are popular, including big ticket items such as automobiles, Mr. O'Connor asked, "why not two bathrooms?" This is a perfectly legitimate question, he said, and asserted, "Certainly two bathrooms are essential today, with the size of present day families."

■ Mr. O'Connor told the plumbers that the answer to the industry's problem lies in selling bathrooms in the same forceful way as autos and other major consumer products are being sold, with all the tools of advertising and merchandising. He recommended that plumbing retailers press for advertising in their marketing areas, to be shared with and prepared by manufacturers. #

The company will feature all its major cigaret brands on the shows, while ASR Products, a division, will participate in sponsorship of the NFL games on behalf of its Pal injector blades.

"SELL ME GROCERIES IN THE MORNING," says BUFFALO

Morning is the best time to talk food to Buffalo's women, who bought 406 million dollars worth last year.

Buffalo's retail grocers spent $1,100,000 on newspaper advertising in 1960, and the six leading grocery chains placed over half their total linage in the morning Courier-Express.

Add to this the fact that more and more total food advertising dollars are moving to Buffalo's morning paper, and you can see the sense in choosing the morning Courier-Express as your Buffalo food salesman.

To reach Western New York's top 160,000 households with the most money to spend . . . USE THE MORNING COURIER-EXPRESS

To saturate the 489,903 families in Buffalo and the eight surrounding counties, use the state's largest newspaper outside Metropolitan New York City . . . THE SUNDAY COURIER-EXPRESS.

In these counties, TIME concentrates a greater share of its circulation than any other magazine of over half a million. TIME readers are prime buyers of new cars, used cars and automotive accessories; their cars clock 43% more yearly mileage than the U. S. average.

we include Huntington-Charleston and WSAZ-TV."

THE DECISION TO BUY HUNTINGTON-CHARLESTON is easy to make because it's so easy to back it up with sound dollars-and-cents facts. Two million industrious people spend $4 billion a year in this 4-state, 72-county Dynamic Circle... in the very heart of the "American Ruhr" region of the great Ohio Valley. Here advertisers find close to half a million TV homes. And WSAZ-TV is the only single medium that covers these homes. Higher Income Groups Increase in Denver, 'Post' Finds DENVER, May 16—Denver and suburban families earning more than $10,000 a year have increased from 16.7% in 1960 to 19.1% in 1961, an annual consumer analysis survey just completed by the Denver Post reveals.

It also shows that automobile ownership is at an alltime high and that the ownership of automatic washers, dryers, dishwashers and home freezers is steadily increasing.

More than 210,000 families—84.5% of those in the market—own their homes. By income, home ownership ranges from 74.3% of families earning less than $5,000 a year to 96.1% of those in the $15,000-plus annual income class, the survey report says.

Families earning less than $4,000 account in 1961 for 13.2% of the Denver market, down from 14.1% in 1960. Families in the $7,000 to $10,000 annual income bracket have increased by 2.4%, according to the Post report.

The number of families investing in stocks and bonds has risen nearly 5% to 31.4% of the 248,700 families in Denver and suburbs.

TV Package Plans More Prevalent in Big Markets: Weed

NEW YORK, May 16—The majority of this country's commercial television stations make use of published package plans, the availability of such packages of spots varying somewhat by the size of market. Packaging is most prevalent in multi-station major markets; it is less well established in single-station markets.

Most published package offers, ranging from two to 20 spots a week, are in fixed position, but some stations show fixed position and run of station plans. About one-third of the stations offer package plans for prime time, but one-half count prime time announcements against the number required to qualify an advertiser for a plan rate.

■ These were among findings reported this week by Weed Television Corp., station representative. Basic data for the report, titled "Television 1961: Packaged, Taped & Brightly Colored," came from Standard Rate & Data Service. Some 490 stations were covered in the Weed analysis.

Weed also found plans covering IDs to be rare, relatively few stations allowing consecutive weeks' discounts on package plan purchases, and most packages built on the number of announcements purchased per week. Plan discounts ranged from 20% to 50%.

Some 40% of the stations include tv tape among their published facilities, with most of the concentration in the larger markets. About 43% of the commercial stations indicate that they are equipped "to some degree to transmit color programming and/or commercials."

All the data collected by Weed are broken down by four, three, two and one-station markets. #

CHICAGO, May 16—The Merchandise Mart is attempting to strengthen its summer home furnishings market, set for June 18-24, with a $100,000 advertising and promotion campaign.

The Project Prosperity campaign is aimed primarily at buyers. Wallace Ollman, general manager of the mart, has sent a letter to tenants urging them to join the campaign in three ways:

of more than 50 spots per week are being run on WNBC-TV, WOR-TV and WNEW-TV in a minimum schedule of seven weeks, which started May 1. Robert Lawrence Productions filmed the spot under the direction of Leber & Katz, New York, Swanee Paper Corp.'s agency.

Hearst Corp. Offers to Buy Remainder of Hearst Con 'A' Stock

NEW YORK, May 16—Hearst Corp., parent company of Hearst Consolidated Publications, which has lost money for three consecutive years, has offered to buy Hearst Con's Class A preferred stock at $25 a share. The stock has been selling for about $12.50 a share.

Hearst Corp. already owns the majority of Hearst Con's 1,189,849 outstanding Class A shares (810,151 additional shares are in the Hearst Con treasury), and all 2,000,000 shares of Hearst Consolidated common stock.

The parent company did not say how much Class A it hoped to buy under the tender offer, which expires June 20. It indicated, however, that a revitalization of ailing Hearst Consolidated was under way.

The subsidiary lost $6,461,896 last year, $2,402,580 in 1959, and $2,710,000 in 1958. A 1961 first-quarter report, just issued, showed Hearst Consolidated lost $3,216,900 in the period, compared with 1960's first quarter $2,066,300.

Hearst Corp. said the "list of Hearst Consolidated holdings might be revised." It said Hearst Corp. had "tremendous surplus funds," and would "pay cash for any magazine, newspaper, or tv station worth acquiring."

The multi-level Hearst ownership picture shapes up like this:

A subsidiary of Hearst Consolidated, Hearst Publishing, last year trimmed the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph and Detroit Times from its roster. That left Hearst Publishing with The American Weekly, Puck, The Comic Weekly, the Los Angeles Examiner, Los Angeles Herald Express, San Francisco Examiner, Seattle Post-Intelligencer, and—via a corporate owner, Apex Publishing—50% of the San Fran- cisco News-Call Bulletin (Scripps-Howard Newspapers owns the other 50% of Apex).

Hearst Publishing also owns all of WCAE, Pittsburgh radio station. In turn, WCAE owns 50% of Television City Inc., which operates WTAE, a tv station in that city.

Hearst Con, meanwhile, publishes the Baltimore News-Post & Sunday American, New York Journal-American, and San Antonio Light.

Hearst Corp., the parent, publishes six dailies and four Sunday newspapers, 13 magazines, operates a newspaper feature syndicate—King Features—and has two radio and two tv stations, plus land, mine, and timber holdings. #

THIS is the TOTAL
Seattle Market
as a marketing man sees it...

Are you missing HALF
people?

The TOTAL Seattle market extends from the Pacific Ocean on the West to the snow-capped Cascade Mountains, just 48 miles East from the shores of Puget Sound; from the Canadian border to Lewis County on the South, including the Grays Harbor area.

49% of the people in the Seattle Market live OUTSIDE King County...and here is the way to reach them economically!

This media concept gives
71% PENETRATION
...for only pennies more!

In the TOTAL Seattle Market, one Seattle newspaper gives you only 9.4% penetration outside King County; the other only 16.8%. Remember, HALF the people in the TOTAL Seattle Market live outside King County! For that reason, advertisers who want to reach ALL the market with strong, merchandisable penetration buy

ONE SEATTLE NEWSPAPER and the LOCAL DAILIES

You reach 429,198 homes in the TOTAL Seattle market for only pennies more per line. Your W-H man can show you how to buy the eight "outside" dailies listed here with ONE order, (one bill for those marked *). Get the TOTAL story on the TOTAL Seattle market today.

The total Seattle Market represents nearly TWO BILLION DOLLARS in retail sales . . . nearly half of which are made OUTSIDE King County, the home county of Seattle! This "outside" area is no commuter feeder to Seattle, but a series of individual trading centers, each supporting its own economy with basic industries and agriculture. When you spend all your advertising dollars in Seattle, you pass up, literally, nearly HALF of the market.

It makes sense to buy ONE Seattle newspaper, and the home county newspaper in each of the other counties in the TOTAL Seattle Market. Compare the coverage . . . and the cost . . . and see!

What's up at the newsstands?

Sales of women's magazines. The woman's touch is being felt at newsstands as never before.

In 1960, newsstand sales of women's magazines totaled 54,000,000 — up a phenomenal 4,000,000 over the previous year. On newsstands (and off), no other group of magazines is anywhere near as hot.

This newsstand vitality indicates that our circulation growth is as healthy as it is strong. In the women's field, more and more competition has built better books — and better books have built better audiences. Result: Every month women's magazines deliver a record 18,000,000 plus of the most interested, devoted, moneyed women in America.

From this, two truths must follow: 1. That the Ladies' Home Journal, with the youngest, wealthiest, biggest audience of any women's magazine in 1960, was the most vital magazine buy of them all; 2. That this same Journal, the first women's magazine to have two 7,000,000* issues in a row (March and April), must be even more vital in 1961.

When the Journal speaks—women listen

NO MATTER HOW GOOD YOUR GAME YOU CAN STILL IMPROVE YOUR SCORE

If your game is selling products in the big mass market, there's a better way to score. Take advantage of the facilities of RKO General... the nation's largest non-network owned radio and television group, with more national spot television availabilities (for participating announcements or full program sponsorship) per home coverage than any network or non-network group of stations.

RKO General Radio reaches 82% more radio homes than the largest non-network owned group of radio stations.

RKO General Television reaches 95% more TV homes than the largest non-network owned group of television stations.

RKO General Television offers more than double the national spot availabilities per home coverage from noon to midnight than the largest network-owned group of stations because of no network program commitments by RKO Television stations in three of the top five U.S. markets.

At your request RKO General's national spot representative will document these figures for your Research Department.

Papert, Koenig Adds Faberge; Names Fisher, McClintock

Papert, Koenig, Lois, New York, has been named to handle advertising for Faberge Inc., New York, perfume and toiletries manufacturer. Heretofore the company has done little national advertising of its Faberge fragrances, concentrating its marketing budget on fashion promotions for stores and co-op advertising. During the war it ran its first national ads with copy reading: "Don't buy perfumes, buy bonds." This was its sole national expenditure until last year when it started a series of one-column ads in The New Yorker and fashion books. These were created by the company and placed by James R. Flanagan Advertising.

Papert, Koenig also has named Anita Fisher, formerly with Erwin Wasey, Ruthrauff & Ryan, a copywriter and Thomas McClintock, previously with Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample, a media supervisor.

EDN

AGAIN LAUNCHES A GALAXY OF NEW CIRCUIT PACKAGING IDEAS FOR TOP ELECTRONIC OEM ENGINEERS!

THIS AUGUST, EDN will again stimulate greater strides in electronic circuit packaging by bringing together the nation's leading electronic OEM designers for a review of the newest advances in microscopic, high impact, under-water, high potential and auto-space circuit packaging!

EDN, IN COOPERATION with the University of Colorado, last year inaugurated the Symposium in which 500 engineers participated. Their enthusiastic reaction resulted in expanding the 1960 two-day program to three days this year, allowing more time for open discussion.

EDN OF COURSE will provide the most comprehensive, most eagerly read coverage of Symposium news and developments, right up to, during and following the conference—now a major annual event!

AN EDN CONTRIBUTION to the industry it serves, the non-profit Symposium is actually an extension of the unique EDN editorial philosophy built on Adaptable Design Ideas. This philosophy not only guarantees another successful Packaging Symposium in 1961—it also guarantees continued top readership of both advertising and editorial in EDN.

THIS EDITORIAL PHILOSOPHY also is the big reason why only EDN among electronic engineer publications is showing a 1961 gain in pages of advertising over the same period last year!

Cartoon-Jingle Contest to Promote Purina Dog Chow

St. LOUIS, May 17—A contest campaign for Purina Dog Chow will be promoted this summer via print and television.

The campaign is built around a "Dogs Are Funny" cartoon jingle contest. Contestants select any one of five cartoons and then complete the last line of a jingle. Entries must be accompanied by a weight circle from any size package of Dog Chow. First prize is $20,000 cash, with five second prizes of $4,000 each, and other lesser awards totaling $100,000.

The contest will be advertised in half-page color ads in 160 Sunday newspaper comic sections in mid-July, plus two-color pages in Family Weekly, Life and Look during July and August.

The contest will also be promoted with point-of-purchase displays and on the Dog Chow packages.

Oscar Norling, account supervisor with Gardner Advertising Co., and Richard Vinyard, advertising manager of Purina Dog Chow at Ralston Purina Co., said consumers who frequently clip dog cartoons and send them in, gave them the cue for the contest. The five contest cartoons were created especially for the promotion by leading cartoonists.

Trade ads are running in May and June in Chain Store Age, Food Topics, NARGUS Bulletin, Progressive Grocer, Supermarket Merchandising and Supermarket News. #

MORE IMPORTANT EVERY DAY!

INCREASED COMPLEXITY IN CAR SERVICING OVER THE LAST FIVE YEARS HAS MADE THE CAR DEALER THE IMPORTANT MAN IN THE CAR SERVICING MARKET.

"I'm putting more space, time and money into my service department," says Martin McInerney, General Manager of Simms-Dawson, Detroit, "because the demand is there and because it's getting bigger every day."

Multiplicity is the trend of the auto industry . . . in models, designs, options and parts. In 1956 the public had a choice of 217 American car models. 1961 offers 253! Because of this multiplicity, car servicing today requires more knowledge, more training, more tools, more space, and greater inventory than ever before.

It is becoming increasingly difficult for independent garages and corner gasoline stations to cope with the situation. Car owners now more than ever, depend upon the dealer for complete and competent servicing. Only the car dealer has the knowledge, personnel, equipment, training programs and space to handle the complexity of today's service operations.

Add to this the longer warranty periods and the manufacturers' maintenance programs and you have the reason that the dealer is taking command of the car servicing market!

So whatever automotive product you manufacture or sell, the dealer is the man who is in constant touch with your ultimate customer . . . the man who is so highly influential in the sales of your products . . . the man you must reach!

And Automotive News is the car dealer's publication! More dealers subscribe to, read and prefer Automotive News than any other automotive publication!

That's why so many manufacturers already depend on Automotive News for complete coverage of the vital car dealer market. And that's why you should look to Automotive News . . . to reach and sell the man who is taking command of the complex business of car servicing.

like today's younger, bigger family trend to ABC

Youth must not only be served. It must be deserved. By the kind of alert, alive programming a network does.

Cause . . . ABC's leadership in sports (ABC's Wide World of Sports, Bing Crosby Golf Tournament, Fight of the Week, NCAA Football, American League Football, Orange Bowl Game, College Basketball).

Cause . . . ABC's leadership in action adventure entertainment (The Untouchables, 77 Sunset Strip, SurfSide 6, Maverick, Naked City).

Cause . . . ABC is facing the issues of the day with a vigorous new kind of news reporting (ABC-TV News Final), a vital approach to the public interest (Winston Churchill Series, Close-Up!, Expedition, Directions '61, Issues & Answers).

Effect . . . a decisive lead in younger families. For example: in households where the head is under 40, ABC is first with 24.7%, Net Y second with 20.9%, Net Z third with 18.3%.*

Effect . . . a decisive lead in larger families. For example: in families of five or more, ABC leads with 27.8%, Net Y second with 21.5%, Net Z, third with 19.0%.*

Telling numbers, these. They deal with the best people to deal with—the big, super-marketing crowd. They're America's best spenders. Which is why ABC is now attracting America's smartest trenders.

Next time you go to a performance of fine concert artists in your community—which will probably be in September or October—you're in for a pleasant surprise.

Its name will be BRAVO!

BRAVO! will command a good deal of your attention—and that of the rest of the audience—that evening...and in the days and weeks to follow. For this new magazine is unlike any you have ever seen.

First, there's that business of the highly local and extremely timely program that is part of the BRAVO! "package" (could anything be more local, or more timely, than the program for the concert you're about to hear?).

Next, there's BRAVO!'s exciting editorial format and content. It's a lively, handsome, knowledgeable collection of the finest original views of the variegated world of the lively arts, the people who make it and the people who love it.

Third, there's this most unusual method of distribution—a magazine placed in your hand, personally, at one of your community's leading cultural (and social) events. You know the people who will be reading it. They're your own neighbors and friends, the kind of people you like to be with. And their number, in similar local gatherings across the country, is more than 700,000!

You might form your own conclusions about the economic power of BRAVO!'s audience right there in your own local auditorium. Or you might write us, and ask for more scientific evidence. But in any case, we ask you to think about BRAVO!—now—as a new advertising vehicle for the products you make or sell. Your ad—you can tell by just looking around you when you do attend that concert—couldn't be in better hands.

Want some truly expert opinions on which news magazine is "the most important magazine of all"? . . . Here they are:

Newspaper editors vote "U.S. News & World Report" first among news magazines in four important ways

Between February 20 and March 20, editors of all daily newspapers in the U.S. were invited by an independent research organization to rate the weekly news magazines* in terms of the four simple and definitive questions listed below. Of the 2,022 editors polled, 1,495, or 73.9%, replied. Here's what they said:

	Percent of newspaper editors who name "U.S. News & World Report"	Percent of newspaper editors in cities of 50,000 and more who name "U.S. News & World Report"	Percent of newspaper editors in cities of 100,000 and more who name "U.S. News & World Report"
1. "personally read" "Which of the following magazines do you personally read regularly?"	56%	67%	69%
2. "most useful" "Which one of the above news magazines do you find most useful to you in your work?"	59%	63%	63%
3. "most objective and fair" "In your appraisal of the news content of these three magazines, which one would you say is the most objective and fair in its handling of the news?"	62%	62%	58%
4. "best job of objective reporting on the new administration" "Since the presidential election, which one of these three magazines would you say has done the best job of objective reporting on the new administration and what to expect from it?"	62%	64%	65%

What these replies mean to readers and advertisers

QUESTION NO. 1 indicates that "U.S. News & World Report" is the year-round favorite magazine for news among those whose profession is news, and whose standards would be most critical as to what does and does not constitute important reading. "U.S. News & World Report" publishes more pages of news than any other news magazine.

QUESTION NO. 2 underscores the unique quality of "U.S. News & World Report" as the news magazine that publishes a great deal of original news—that is, news found in no other publication, whether it be magazine or newspaper. Obviously, newspaper editors would not be so interested in reading what they already knew or had printed. Nor would they be inclined to reprint exclusive news articles from "U.S. News & World Report" to the extent they do—in newspapers throughout this nation and abroad.

QUESTION NO. 3 emphasizes one of the most fundamental facts about "U.S. News & World Report," namely that only one page in the entire magazine ever presents editorial opinion of any kind—and that is the last page, which presents the editor's opinion.

The news pages are precisely what they are judged to be—objective reporting and analysis by the staff of editors independent of the editorial views expressed on the final page.

QUESTION NO. 4 is particularly revealing in that the question was asked of newspaper editors when the presidential campaign, the election and the first "new frontier" actions and decisions were very recent or new events. In this highly sensitive area of news, this vote on "the best job of objective reporting" (from all shades of political opinion) is resounding and authentic endorsement, indeed.

The newspaper editors covered in this survey are only one segment of the more than 1,200,000 responsible and opinion-making leaders who buy and read "U.S. News & World Report" each week. These readers include key people in business, industry, government, the professions and in the community. They constitute an all-important market—one that is prompting more and more companies to spearhead their advertising campaigns in "U.S. News & World Report." More and more of them now consider this magazine to be—... the most important magazine of all

WHERE'S FARGO?

Right across the river from Moorhead, naturally . . . and Fargo-Moorhead is the hub of the LARGEST MARKET between SPOKANE and MINNEAPOLIS!

This market — 21 counties in North Dakota and western Minnesota — contains over 300,000 people who spend over $400 million annually in retail stores.* Over 3 out of 5 (64%) of these families are Fargo Forum readers, while no Minneapolis daily reaches more than 1 out of 10. And in the Fargo-Moorhead new Standard Metropolitan Area, Forum coverage is 99%, compared to 8% for any Minneapolis daily.

It's time you, too, found Fargo. We're short on Indians, but long on wampum. And our natives use it every day to buy what you sell them with advertising in The Fargo Forum.

General Dynamics Cuts Institutional 'for Time Being'

NEW YORK, May 16—General Dynamics Corp., which blossomed last year as a major institutional advertiser, has decided to put cash conservation ahead of corporate image-making.

As a result, the corporation's institutional advertising has been scrapped "for the time being." Homer H. Evans Jr., ad director, this week confirmed previous reports that advertising is now "pretty much" confined to product selling (AA, April 24).

The cutback would amount to an estimated $1,000,000 if continued in full force through the calendar year. However, Mr. Evans pointed out that the corporation has a "flexible" operation that could bring about a change well before the end of the year.

General Dynamics, the nation's No. 1 weapon maker (among its divisions are Convair, Electric Boat and Stromberg-Carlson), does about 75% of its $1.5 billion volume with the U.S. government. In 1960, it registered a whopping loss of $27,000,000.

The corporation returned to black ink in the first 1961 quarter and the advertising department is hopeful that finances will improve enough to allow resumption of the institutional campaign before the end of the year. Also hopeful is D'Arcy Advertising, which reported that it has two campaigns already prepared, just waiting for the brake to be taken off.

General Dynamics, a corporation put together in the postwar period by a series of mergers and acquisitions, greatly expanded its institutional advertising in 1960 with a series of four-color spreads in 19 magazines, 13 of them circulating outside the U.S. This campaign won for Frank Pace Jr., board chairman of General Dynamics, an award from the Art Directors Club of New York.

Publishers Information Bureau figures show that in 1960 the corporation spent $520,000 on "Convair general promotion" and $560,000 on "General Dynamics general promotion."

Not affected by the cutback is the corporate schedule in Scientific American. General Dynamics has had the back cover of this book for the past four years on a 12-time non-cancelable basis.

While corporate advertising per se has been stopped, the modern design techniques used in this program have been retained so that even the General Dynamics product ads now have a corporate flavor. #

The four-color perforated spread for Qantas Empire Airlines (via Cunningham & Walsh) features 24 individual travel stickers showing Qantas stops. Letters Are Most Successful Form of Direct Mail: Buckley

NEW YORK, May 16—Letters constitute the form of direct mail "most likely to succeed" in getting tangible results, Earle A. Buckley, president of Buckley Organization, Philadelphia, believes.

That's why he has written "How to Increase Sales with Letters," a new direct mail book stressing letters, published by McGraw-Hill Book Co. (182 pages, $5).

Mr. Buckley dissects the "anatomies" of a sale, a prospect and a letter and covers, among other types, letters designed to get leads and appointments for salesmen and those used for followup and pre-selling.

In the chapter on lists, Mr. Buckley discusses more than 100 general and specialized business and professional directories. He also gives his answers to frequently asked questions about sales letters and offers hints on the proper handling of inquiries. #

American Machinist / Metalworking Manufacturing

If you sell to metalworking, ask your customers to tell you which business publications they find most useful in their work—then advertise there. Twenty-five companies conducted such surveys on their own during the last 10 years—and American Machinist/Metalworking Manufacturing was consistently the winner . . . hands down!

Reason? AM/MM is the technical publication of metalworking—and metalworking is a highly technical industry.

AM/MM concentrates on how-to articles, case histories and working information on the often highly complex methods and procedures involved in manufacturing things from metal more efficiently, more profitably. In short, it's a 26-times-a-year work book. If metalworking is your market, it will work for you.

For up-to-date facts and figures on metalworking, ask your AM/MM district manager for a copy of the 1960 Market Guide for Sales Executives.

CASE STUDY IN PRINTING THAT PAYS

Sales booklet

pays profits for 28 years, and still pulls as well as ever

Donnelley's has been reprinting for more than a quarter of a century a selling booklet in which our customer has never changed a word without first consulting a member of our Creative Staff. (And reprints are mighty economical, as compared with a completely new job every time supply runs out!)

This booklet rolled up a record for the depression year, 1933, equal to that of the banner year, 1929.

This booklet has accounted for 85 per cent of all sales ever since, through good times and bad. From where we sit, it looks good for another quarter-century.

The moderately added exertion and added cost of good printing (as compared with "low bid" printing) is far and away the best part of the bargain.

This kind of printing is what our Company—with its notorious addiction to Quality—aims at constantly. The case cited above was a very small job as printing jobs go. But it has meant sustained prosperity to our customer, and he (like all other small and medium-size buyers) gets the best we've got. And he always will.

What job do you have that might be converted from mediocre success to a big profit-maker? Regardless of its size, we should be glad to talk it over with you. No obligation. Simply drop us a line or telephone us.

By all means, get in touch with us today!

THE $7.8 BILLION/YEAR

itch

Inadequate depreciation practices are building up a junk pile in industry at the alarming rate of $7.8 billion a year. The tax depreciation itch is rapidly becoming a rash . . . more and more tired equipment, higher and higher costs and "Where are the profits?"

But have you noticed that management men in the Chemical Process Industries are beginning to perk up? Haven't some of them mentioned there's new hope for reform . . . perhaps, even cited the Special Depreciation Report by CHEMICAL WEEK? If you haven't talked to CPI-Management lately, listen to CW's editors . . .

"Before the 87th Congress goes home this year, it's likely that U.S. industry at long last will get: (1) new tax benefits to spur investment in new plants and equipment; or (2) long advocated further liberalization of depreciation allowances. A combination of both is a distinct possibility and a cheerful prospect for the profit-pinched CPI."

It means as much to you as it does to CW's readers. So why not get a reprint or go back to the March 25th issue and read it. From the task force journalism of this exclusive "Depreciation Report" to the news as it breaks any place, any time in the chemical world . . . it will show you how CHEMICAL WEEK, uniquely, serves CPI-Management in all functions and on all fronts, and always in balance with its needs. If you want to show management men that you, too, understand their problems, and have possible solutions . . . put yourself on record in their magazine.

associates in various businesses ranging from truck tires to baby pants. J. W. Among other things, the campaign already has brought about one of the largest industrial orders in the label button business.

• When American Machine & Foundry Co. produced a series of commercials for the "Tomorrow" series on CBS-TV, the problem arose of finding a method of keeping these commercial messages alive in the minds of the company's various publics. At the same time, it was important for AMF to merchandise the fact that it was sponsoring this educational series on tv and that AMF was associated in the project with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. AMF found the answer in the tv storyboard. Victor Ancona, AMF supervisor of advertising services, adapted the idea to the completed commercials and produced a series of five booklets, each covering the same general ground as one of the two-minute AMF commercials used on the "Tomorrow" show.

STORYBOARDS—The covers of American Machine & Foundry Co.'s "As Seen on Tomorrow" booklets carry the same design theme as the tv program's opening billboard.

All of the booklet covers are identical in design and title, "As Seen on Tomorrow," but a different color is used for each. The booklets are being distributed through reception rooms in the company's headquarters and other facilities. Each company division is distributing a supply to employees, community leaders, salesmen and customers.

• Mutual of Omaha sent a "sneak preview" of one of its three new animated tv commercials to branch offices and agents across the country to merchandise the new commercials, two of which were seen for the first time May 7 on "Chet Huntley Reporting" on NBC-TV. Featuring the voices of Bob and Ray, each commercial tells a whimsically humorous story about a Mutual of Omaha representative receiving a good neighbor award for outstanding service to a policy owner. The "sneak preview" is a folder with storyboard pages and a recording of one commercial about a housewife visiting her husband, son and daughter in Gentle Hospital, and Mr. Seeley, the Mutual of Omaha man, who is rewarded for his prompt service with a plaque that has his name misspelled. A message on the folder suggests the Mutual of Omaha representative order the entire series at $7.50 each for co-op advertising use in his area.

The other commercials tell about a farmer whose hog crop is saved in the nick of time by a Mutual of Omaha man, and about a tree trimmer who catches Dutch Elm Blight and is saved by a Mutual of Omaha man. The commercials were produced through Bozell & Jacobs, Omaha, by Goulding, Elliot, Graham Productions, New York.

• To merchandise an ad featuring vacuum metal steels, Republic Canned Release Steel Corp. is sending a reprint sealed in a coffee can to key missile and aircraft personnel. The coffee can label reads: "Alert! Contains simulated moon atmosphere. Listen for the hiss as you open the can." Actually the reprint of a four-color spread appearing in Newsweek May 22, U.S. News & World Report May 29 and Time June 2 is in a plastic bag on top of the coffee. The reprint also contains the message: "We packed this ad proof in a vacuum can to suggest (1) low pressure moon atmosphere and (2) Republic vacuum Melt steels... The Post Office wouldn't permit us to mail the ad in an empty vacuum can, and it seemed pointless to just fill the can with sand—so enjoy the coffee, compliments of the U.S. postal regulations."

Meldrum & Fewsmith is the agency for Republic. The merchandising piece was created by John Hodges of the agency's sales promotion department.

During the promotion, to run through the summer, every Pepsi six-pack will feature

• A. S. Harrison Co., South Norwalk, Conn., maker of Preen floor

waxes, was faced with the problem of trying to obtain free distribution of a new booklet, "The Art of Caring for Wood Floors." The company designed an attention-getting collar for the Preen can and attached the collar to the booklet. Brooks & Porter, New York, made the collar; G. W. Daneman, New York, printed the booklet. Both were then assembled at a perforated seam at the back, making for easy detachment of the booklet from the collar, which announced that the free booklet was attached to the can.

• As a highlight of Massey-Ferguson's spring advertising campaign, one of the longest pieces of continuous original art for an ad has been adapted for use in a coloring contest for youngsters. Open to children 6 to 12, the Massey-Ferguson-Successful Farming-sponsored contest offers more than 200 prizes for identifying the equipment and coloring the b&w reproduction of the ad, a six-page four-color Bruce Bomberger drawing that illustrates 24 different pieces of M-F farm equipment and implements. Some 100 people are included in the layout. The ad is one in a series prepared by Needham, Louis & Brorby.

The big ad has appeared in Farm Journal, Progressive Farmer and

• B. T. Babbitt put its manufacturing machinery to an unexpected use when its assembly line packaged a press release along with a sample product in the container of another product. Some 700 outdoor and pet editors received a new release on skunks based on a survey of their experiences with the woodland creatures as reported to Babbitt. The editors also received an "anti-skunk gun" in the form of an aerosol spray can of Babbitt's room deodorant, Air-Gene. Both the release and the Air-Gene were enclosed in a sealed, giant-sized unlabeled can of the company's Bab-O. Robert J. Neyen, assistant sales promotion manager, evolved the mechanics of the mailing.

packaged product, a rundown of the sponge's features, a summary of the introductory program, an explanation of the profit structure, plus a specific recommendation for the first order from each customer. All this is contained in a compact 4 1/4 x 6 1/2 x 1 3/4" package.

Since the principal feature of the new sponge is that it dries soft, Simoniz suggests that a member of the buying committee wet one sponge prior to the presentation to the committee and ask other committee members to compare the two—one which has dried soft and the other which never has been dampened.

The plastic-covered card was one of 100 entitling the finder to from $1 to $10 released in balloons at the opening of a new office of the Citizens & Southern National Bank, Atlanta, in 1952. Melvin G. Raley, Gibson, Rt. 1, said the card was found on his farm, but that "age and weather conditions had completely destroyed the balloon." Gibson, located in Glascock County, is about 35 miles southwest of Augusta and 110 miles from Atlanta—as the balloon flies. The card returned by Mr. Raley was good for $1, but bank officials felt that after nine years it should be worth more. A check for $25 was sent to Mr. Raley—not by balloon.

Surging ahead

...the wave of the future in mass communications

Ten weeks ago, Macfadden Publications—long a respected name in magazine publishing—combined its interests with Bartell Broadcasting Corporation, operator of a chain of outstanding U. S. radio stations and foreign TV stations.

From the union of these two forces has come a wave of action and accomplishment that continues, daily, to gain momentum and dimension.

On March 30, Macfadden acquired a large portion of Teleglobe Pay-TV Systems. A test of this system, considered the finest of its kind, will be held in an area to be selected.

On April 18, Macfadden acquired from Hillman Publications "Pageant" magazine and Hillman Paperback Books, whose titles include "Conscience of a Conservative" and "Born Free."

As a preliminary to accepting advertising, "Pageant" is being A.B.C.-audited. Guaranteed circulation is 500,000—98.4% newsstand sales. By the end of 1961, a 250,000 circulation increase is contemplated.

On April 25, Macfadden acquired a major interest in Process Lithographers, a leading printing firm. This acquisition will expand printing facilities, increase printing efficiency and reduce printing costs.

Purchase of other properties is being explored. Macfadden and Bartell are examining, particularly, the fields of motion pictures, radio and electronic communications.

Big doings at Macfadden magazines

Coincident with these acquisitions, Macfadden launched an all-out drive to expand the audience of the Macfadden publications. Editors are now refurbishing editorial content to create new reader excitement and approval. Aggressive circulation promotion is going on.

Already, a new ground-swell of acceptance for Macfadden magazines has been noted among Macfadden's circulators. Substantial circulation increases, immediate and long-term, are indicated.

Behind all these accomplishments

Macfadden's expansion program is founded on one widely unrecognized, yet now fully documented truth: middle-class communications media, especially middle-class magazines, do NOT effectively reach the mass consumer.

Logically and incontrovertibly, Macfadden will expose this blunt reality of the American marketplace . . . will demonstrate that today's mass consumer offers an all but untapped marketing frontier . . . will suggest a searching reappraisal of conventional media values by national advertisers and their agencies.

This is Macfadden's conviction: the battle of national brands will be won or lost depending on the attitudes of mass, not middle-class, consumers. In this vast area, virtually unexplored by middle-class media, The Macfadden Communications Complex will continue to surge ahead.

this one margarine grow so far so fast?

How Fleischmann's used Reader's Digest to help turn a new product into a top seller in less than a year

"After achieving national distribution in late 1959, Fleischmann's Corn Oil Margarine, made from 100% golden corn oil, enjoyed an unusually fast sales growth. It has grown at a faster rate than any other margarine," reports Joel S. Mitchell, Chairman of the Board of Standard Brands Inc.

"Reader's Digest definitely helped in this growth," Mr. Mitchell continues. "Sales increased remarkably when we used two coupon advertisements in the Digest. The first appeared regionally in August, 1959, before we had national distribution. The second ran nationally in November, 1959.

"Reader's Digest gets a large share of our magazine budget for many reasons," Mr. Mitchell points out. "Originally, its regional flexibility let our advertising coverage grow with our distribution. Now, it gives us coverage of one out of every four families all across America. Moreover, in the Digest we reach high-income, educated, knowledgeable people."

Standard Brands has been successful, too, in building sales through its advertising in the Digest for Royal Gelatin and Royal Puddings, Chase & Sanborn Instant Coffee and Instant Siesta. Recently it also used the Metropolitan New York Edition of the Digest to initiate advertising of new, Fleischmann's unsalted Sweet Margarine, which is presently in regional distribution.

Why not benefit from the experience of one of America's most successful marketers? Your product will grow best where it has the most chances-to-sell. And each dollar you invest in the Digest buys double the chances-to-sell.

Standard Brands uses Digest internationally

Standard Brands, one of America's most successful international marketers, has increased its business overseas every year since forming its international company in 1947. It markets in more than one hundred countries, uses Reader's Digest editions in Canada, Latin America, Europe and Africa. Standard Brands knows that overseas, as in the United States, more of its best customers and prospects read the Digest than read any other magazine. Last year a most successful promotion was a 20-page detachable insert in the Digest's Caribbean Edition.

CONNOISSEUR—Irwin W. Solomon, adman and author, tests the flavor of a French soup prepared by his wife, Esther, adwoman and author.

Versatile Adman .. Irwin W. Solomon

When Irwin W. Solomon, vp and copy director of Al Paul Lefton Co., Philadelphia, is asked by his wife, Esther, to taste morsels of what she is cooking on the stove, it is strictly in the spirit of professional cooperation.

The same was true when Irwin, last year, asked Mrs. Solomon, formerly a copywriter of Philip Klein Advertising and Richard A. Foley Advertising Agency and now a free lance, to check some copy he was preparing for his first book.

The collaboration will pay off for the couple in the form of two books. The first is Irv's, "How to Start and Build an Art Collection," to be published this month by Chilton Co. Mrs. Solomon's work will be a French cook book, tentatively scheduled by a New York publisher for release late in 1962.

Both books are direct outgrowths of hobbies. For Irv, the collecting of art is self-taught. As his collection increased and his visits to galleries all over the country became more frequent, his knowledge and reputation also grew. Mrs. Solomon's interest in cooking is comparatively recent. Before she married Irv in 1948, she admittedly was not a very good cook. But, since he proved to be a gourmet, she felt it was her duty to learn how to cook choicer morsels. It soon became a hobby, which led her to attend the famed Cordon Bleu cooking school in Paris.

Mr. Solomon, a graduate of the Wharton school of the University of Pennsylvania, started out as an actor in stock companies and with WCAU and WHAT in Philadelphia. This led to writing radio scripts and commercials. Then he was working as a copywriter in the Klein agency. In 1936 he joined the Philadelphia copy staff of the old Erwin, Wasey & Co. Four years later he moved to Lefton. He rejoined the agency after the war as copy chief and in 1951 was named vp and copy director.

During the war, Mr. Solomon was editor of "The Alert," official newspaper of the harbor defenses of Los Angeles. He remained on the West Coast after the war to edit the short-lived magazine, The Californian. During this period, he also wrote articles and fiction for many consumer and trade magazines.

Mrs. Solomon attended the University of Pennsylvania. She met her future husband and collaborator in 1941 when she visited the Lefton offices to try to convince the agency to include some housing shortage publicity in its advertising.

Sutton Suspends Monthly 'Industrial Electronics'

Sutton Publishing Co. has suspended publication of Industrial Electronics after three pilot and four regular issues. be at the local level, with half of the latter amount going into cooperative newspaper ads and the rest into dealer promotional materials. Unit sales in the Remington portable division last year were 72.3% ahead of 1959, while the portable business industrywide was up an estimated 1.1%, according to Mr. Brown.

Ad Associates Adds One

Continental Mfg. Co., Baltimore, manufacturer of heating equipment, has named Advertising Associates, Richmond, Va., to handle its account.

SEVEN YEARS' BAD LUCK! A split second to happen...seven years to clean up. No matter how serious the accident, no matter how obvious the blame—in Chicago, it takes seven long years, on the average, for a traffic accident case to be resolved in the courts. WBBM-TV found the situation alarming...and brought its case for reform to immediate public attention, via a recent documented editorial, broadcast in prime evening hours. The result was the kind of hard-hitting, responsible local programming Chicagoans have come to expect from CBS Owned WBBM-TV.

People who value their time find more worth watching on WBBM-TV. Which is why time is so valuable on Television 2, Chicago's top-rated station for 71 consecutive Nielsens. WBBM-TV

DEBUT—Opening with "an entire new and complete stock of ready-made clothing," purchased "under the pressure of the times at very low rates," and promising to "sell... accordingly," John Wanamaker and partner Nathan Brown bought front page space in the April 27, 1861, issue of the old Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Wanamaker Marks 100th Birthday; Ad Pioneering Paid off for Retailer

Advertiser Put 97% of First Day's Receipts ($24) into Next Ad

PHILADELPHIA, May 16—A store that advertising helped build hit the century mark this year. It is not stretching belief to say that the late John Wanamaker—holder of a fistful of firsts in merchandising, advertising and promotion—would give advertising a large portion of the credit for the success of the Philadelphia store he founded a century ago. John Wanamaker is marking its anniversary with page institutional newspaper ads, which will also support special events scheduled throughout the remainder of the year. The theme is "100 years young."

The Wanamaker store, today a user of some 4,000,000-5,000,000 lines of newspaper advertising a year, got off to an early start as an advertiser. When he was 22, John Wanamaker opened a men's and boys' store called Oak Hall. He invested $24 of the first day's sale of $24.67 in an ad in the old Public Ledger.

■ The ad worked. People came to buy at Oak Hall.

From that time on, John Wanamaker was a heavy and consistent advertiser, believing advertising was necessary in good or bad times.

He helped pave the way from the older fusty attitudes of retail merchandising. Some of his "stunts" were shocking at the time. He launched balloons and offered a suit for their return. He was an early user of "teasers," plastering the city with posters cryptically printed "W&B"—for Wanamaker who worked on Wanamaker advertising in the early years were John E. Powers, Manly E. Gillam, and Joseph H. Appel.

The present store at 13th and Market Sts. was the "great general store" or forerunner of today's department store. It was also the store for which Mr. Wanamaker began large scale advertising.

The early ads were chatty. The buyer had to beware in the 19th century, but the philosophy of John Wanamaker and some other retail merchants of that time, including Marshall Field, in Chicago, and A. T. Stewart, in New York, was to give the customer his money's worth.

■ Mr. Wanamaker advertised, for example, that "Nothing will be sold that is not all wool." His was a one-price-for-all system, with return of goods and refund of money promised if the goods "do not please the folks at home."

The reason the store did so much business "when other houses are dull" was simply because "we advertise what we have for sale. We have for sale what we advertise," John Wanamaker said.

Two of his firsts were the first white sale in this country and the first use of electrical lighting by a store. His store also pioneered in home delivery and telephone service.

Mr. Wanamaker was also fond of lacing his ads with editorials he had written.

■ He died in 1922. Today his grandson, John Wanamaker, chairman of the board, and Richard C. Bond, president of the store and its four branches, continue the same policies.

Advertising is the concern of C. Carroll Wyatt, advertising director since 1953. He heads a staff of 35, and also uses about as many free lancers. Working with merchandise managers and buyers, the advertising department weighs such considerations as sales volume, past performance and location of departments to determine budgets.

Heavy schedules appear in Philadelphia dailies and also in dailies and weeklies near the branch stores. Wanamaker's also uses direct mail and catalogs extensively and does some radio and tv advertising.

■ The big change in retail advertising over the years, Mr. Wyatt notes, has been the addition of the "professional touch," now that advertising has come into its own. "The ads still have to do the same thing, though—bring out the benefits of the merchandise to the consumer."

The professional touch is quite evident in Wanamaker's ads. Even sale ads are neat. Color is used often. The store bends over backward to the truth, Mr. Wyatt said. The merchandise information office checks prices and product claims.

Customers respond not only by coming to the store, but by throwing brickbats. As late as 1961, an ad reader objected to an illustration of a woman wearing a brassiere. Many object to models smoking or holding drinks, though cocktail glasses are advertised on the next page.

The morning dawned bright and clear with a hint of spring in the air. As people buffed through the narrow Philadelphia streets, few if any, paid attention to the young man hurrying down Sixth Street toward the southeast corner of Market. It was 5:30 a.m. and John Wanamaker's inner excitement matched his eager stride. He was on the way to open for the day's business, his new Men's and Boys' Clothing Store, Oak Hall. The tiny one room store was as small as his dream was big. Little did he realize that morning how his dream would grow into reality through the years and revolutions, starting from casual bartering in one of the country's biggest businesses. Today, 100 years and five stores later we thank you from the bottom of our hearts for the part you've played in making his dream come true. We hope you'll celebrate with us throughout the next one hundred years.

Wanamaker continues to grow both physically and in sales volume. It is renovating its main store and will add a fifth branch in Moorestown Township, N.J. #

'Vogue' Boosts Two

William Stowell, advertising manager of Vogue, has been promoted to assistant advertising director. Richard McMahon, fashion advertising manager, has been promoted to advertising manager.

KBOX Names Pearson

KBOX, Dallas, has appointed Stanton J. Pearson sales manager, succeeding Lloyd R. George. Mr. Pearson was formerly zone marketing manager of Miller Brewing Co.

Dow Opens Handi-Wrap Push

Dow Chemical Co., Midland, Mich., is using a special insert for Handi-Wrap in newspapers in four markets. The four-color ad is being printed with a wallpaper design with a blank column on which the newspapers will surprint Dow's sales message. The ad has appeared in the San Diego Union and Tribune, the Rock Island Argus, Moline Dispatch, Davenport Times and Democrat, Duluth News-Tribune and Herald. Ads were also scheduled in the Indianapolis Star and News. In addition to the newspaper insert, the Handi-Wrap promotion is being supported with national consumer magazine and television advertising, plus point of purchase display materials.

Founders Mutual to Schreiber

Founders Mutual Depositor Corp., Denver, has appointed Mark Schreiber Advertising, Denver, to handle advertising and public relations for Founders Mutual Fund on an international basis.

She Had Lost $10

"I have lost $10," said a lady in the Men's Furnishing Store just before Christmas.

She was looking at a French gray silk crepe house coat, a Paris importation, marked $25.

The salesman to whom she turned after making the quiet remark was startled.

He looked on the floor. "No," she said, "not there. I bought my husband a coat exactly like this at _____ (mentioning an exclusive Fifth Avenue shop), and paid $35 for it."

This incident discloses two facts about this Store:

- 1—It is worth while reading the advertisements on this page.
- 2—It is not wise to make purchases before making comparisons.

W. L. 2-12-93 J. H. Wanamaker

The Opinionated Person

ignores advertising, observation and study. He will truly tell you that some advertising is padded.

Please jot this down. But there is other advertising that is not made up with black type usually, and foggy truth.

The busiest man and the busiest Store are most talkative. Almost anyone can blow a bubble, but it is only a bubble after all.

A Store carefully organized and regulated like this is a Store of everyday advantages, giving out daily special changes as they appear, instead of saving lots for special days.

To collect slow-selling things or manufacture remnants and put together "left overs" is easy, and to advertise hurrab prices is not difficult, but it does not accord with the new storekeeping system observed here, where a Good Store in the sale idea, having things people want, fresh, new and at prices so moderated that buyers quickly take them away.

ALFRED BESTER, PHOTOGRAPHED FOR HOLIDAY BY BURT GLINN

PERHAPS YOU REMEMBER HIM FROM THE PHANTOM?

Or Superman? Or Mandrake the Magician? Alfred Bester broke into the entertainment world as a "squinka writer," the fellow who puts the words into the mouths of comic strip characters. Today as Antic Arts columnist for Holiday Magazine, he deftly takes the words out of the mouths of celebrities.

Along the way Bester has been a novelist, screen and television writer, TV director and creator of TV spectacles. If there is anything in the entertainment business he hasn't done, he certainly knows someone who has. And being a show business insider adds a third dimension to his Holiday writing. Sample Bester at his best in the May Holiday as he probes the private lives of two of New York's highest-paid fashion models. Holiday's ability to bring the right writer and the right subject together has helped win a most actively loyal following: over 900,000 affluent families and thousands of successful advertisers. Let's Tax Economists' Salaries, Disgusted Reader Says After Reading Dorner's Speech

To the Editor: May I be the first to welcome Mr. Peter Dorner [AA, May 8] (not Doctor Dorner?) to the ranks of Packard, Schlesinger, et al. Get on that old bandwagon, Mr. Dorner! Now advertising can be the scapegoat for not only inflation, monopolies, "wasteful" consumer spending and low moral standards, but must also share the responsibility for our possible loss of free world leadership. However, this new tooth on the old saw isn't disturbing compared to the following points which arise:

1. Who is to decide which items and services are "important to social welfare" and will win the confidence of the "hungry, ideologically 'uncommitted' millions?" Their confidence will be won by military strength, paid for by a strong economy of which advertising is an essential factor... and they'll never "love" us.

2. What is "full employment" as defined by economists; have we ever had it?

3. If the heavy, groping hand of government is to place a limit on advertising expenditures, would this mean only national ads? Or would it include sales promotion and p.o.p., pr, packaging, etc.? How about the extensive advertising budgets of politicians and their parties; what does this contribute to our leadership of the free world? Why not tax market research expenditures, too? Better yet, why not just eliminate free enterprise and let the country's economists build us a Utopia?

4. What percentage of sales is the advertising limit to be based upon? Last year's sales, next year's sales forecast or the necessary amount for the job? The third is discounted completely, the second difficult to control, so we assume it's the first; ergo, if general economic conditions result in poor sales for the year, next year the budget should be cut even more... and next year more, etc. It's silly to "lead" your sales, right?

5. With the admitted necessity of specially adapting the legislation to each industry, and the unmentioned fantastic administrative costs of such a program, it would probably cost the government (and the taxpayer) more to administer the tax than it would be worth... particularly after the futility of the whole operation is realized.

There are times when I am disturbed by the ethics of advertisers, and I recognize that advertising has its weaknesses and limitations, as do all professions; nevertheless, weighed in terms of contributions to our economy, I'm convinced the value of advertising exceeds that of either politics or economics. So, perhaps the ideal solution is to place a special tax on salaries paid consulting economists in both government and business, and on all their published works, for we have no evidence that these services aid our country in making the best use of its natural resources.

Kenneth Groesbeck Upholds Important Role of Retailer

To the Editor: Eugene Whitmore says he is surprised at me that I did not put more importance on the retail gasoline dealer in my "Agencies Ask Us" piece of April 24.

Fact is, I agree heartily with Mr. Whitmore as to the great importance of the retail merchant, not only in selling gasoline but in handling practically all kinds of merchandise.

If my friend will take another look at that piece, he will see I listed "Service at Station" as one of the five leading reasons why anyone buys one gasoline rather than another.

What we were talking about was various advertising appeals, wondering why there was so much difference of opinion among agencies, judging by the way they spent so much money on so many different slants.

I would have written Mr. Whitmore direct on this, except that I cannot afford to allow to go uncorrected the impression that I underestimate the retailer. He can practically make or break any product because of the consumer's confidence in his advice, provided (as he usually does) he merits it. Far too little attention is given the retailer, in most marketing plans.

Kenneth Groesbeck,
New York.

Adman Finds Some Editors Are Venal in 'Judging' Stories

To the Editor: ... Disgusting as is the agency which holds out an ad contract as a lure for the appearance of an obvious editorial plant, the editor with a venal point of view is even less professional.

Before I bring the wrath of publishers down on this greying pate, let me make clear that at least 95% of all editors are honest, sincere and highly professional—nay, dedicated.

Most of those we contact will run a story if it is news, and toss it if it is not. Friendships and agency prestige are good for an audience, and no more. And that is the way it should be...

Just occasionally enough to possibly portend an unwholesome trend, we have been exposed to a now-and-then suggestion that a feature story might have a better chance if accompanied by an ad contract. To my mind, this disqualifies the publication as an effective medium for either communication.

The press lunch is a delightful break in the day... but when abused, it becomes a sheer and unmitigated handout with no sound relation to the value of the project...

Since a good news source performs as much of a service to the publication as he does to his own client, an unduly large lunch, dinner or entertainment tab is unrealistic, unprofessional and unnecessary.

Another ordinary adjunct of good press relations is the supplying of the client's product to the publication. In most cases the client is eager for the publication and its representatives to have samples for testing, inspection and personal use.

But here again, tiny abuses are beginning to creep in. An item that retails under $5 is fine to distribute with a lavish hand. But we have had a party or two strongly hint they would very much like to have one of our items in the $100 range. I am sure that such obvious blackmail does not have the approval of the editor or publisher...

Allan Copeland,
Allan Copeland & Garnitz, Chicago.

Fencing Admen, En Garde!

To the Editor: We read with great interest your story in the May 1 edition about Michael Desaro, the fencing adman. I'm sure you'll be hearing from other advertising people who also fence, as Mike's list was pretty short.

Here in the Bay Area, Jack Baker of West-Holliday is a nationally rated fencer in foil, sabre and epee, and is chairman of the Northern California division of the Amateur Fencing League of America. Jack Adams, public relations man for the United Community Fund, is a quality competition fencer with both sabre and epee, and the undersigned is a tyro with foil and sabre. I took it up again after many years away and find it both a fascinating sport and a wonderful conditioner.

Incidentally, the Hungarians you mention in your story were placed one and two in the nationals fence in our Northern California competition, taking the top spots in most tournaments.

John E. Crain,
Publishing Corp., San Francisco.

Was his Polish fan who drew the caricature unaware of his left-handedness or did you accidentally "flop-over" the picture?

Probably wouldn't have noticed this, but I am left-handed and I fence also, although hardly as well as Mr. Desaro.

House Beautiful, Chicago.

Although caricatured as right handed, Fencer Desaro is a lefty, which he says is "about the same as being a left-handed boxer." A left-handed fencer may have a slight advantage, at first anyway—but when two left-handers face each other, "then that's real confusion," he says.

Mr. Sinding Feels He Agrees With Mr. Hartigan on Discounts

To the Editor: I was very shocked to read in the May 1 ADVERTISING AGE on Page 1 and Page 10 that "... views of Joseph Hartigan were in sharp contrast to those expounded later by Thomas A. Sinding..."

Mr. Hartigan and I were talking in the main on different sides of a single topic and where we touched at all, we tended to agree; in fact, I agree almost 100% with all of Mr. Hartigan's views.

In my talk I presented reasons why advertisers and agencies felt that they were entitled to newspaper discounts, and my plea was for uniformity, standardization and simplicity.

My talk in New York was almost the same as I gave in Chicago at the Inland [Daily Press Assn.] convention and which ADVERTISING AGE reported on March 6, Pages 3 and 100.

I am quite confident that what I have said in these talks would be wholeheartedly endorsed, not only by Joseph Hartigan, but by almost all other agency executives...

T. A. Sinding,
Johnson, Kent, Gavin & Sinding, Chicago.

$3 Is Price for Job Book

To the Editor: Is it $3 for the 22-page booklet, "Help Yourself to a Better Job?" (AA, May 1)? If so, someone indeed has!

A. Stark,
Hollis, N.Y.

The $3 price is correct; however, Women's Advertising Club of Chicago members can buy it for $2.

Jim Woolf Wins Praise for Column on Brief Ads

To the Editor: Jim Woolf's column in the May 1 ADVERTISING AGE ("Concerning Directness and Simplicity") sings the praises of brevity in advertising, and thereby earns my hearty approval.

He says, "Writers unskilled in the art of simple directness have a tendency to open up their copy with too many words." Has he, by any chance, been reading some of those columns in the advertising press by one or another of our leading art directors? It would be fine if we could get them to return the compliment, and read his column.

Better yet, let's plump for writing by writers.

Ex-Burnetter Says It's Creative But Not Creative Man's Shop

To the Editor: One of the myths of the advertising business is that Burnett's is a creative man's agency.

Leo himself, in his sod-buster talk to New York copywriters, seemed to foster that idea [AA, April 17].

But it's not true. Those of us who spent years as appleknockers on Michigan Ave. know that.

As one ex-Burnetter put it, you have about as much chance to create at Burnett's as you do of beating a porcupine to death with a balloon.

The reason is simple enough. Leo Burnett is a great creative man. He and his committee are ready, willing and able to do your

Shell Ad Misleads on Role in Mercury Project, He Says

To the Editor: I think the enclosed Shell ad deserves some consideration as the type of advertising we could do without.

BULLETIN:

Shell reveals how the ingenious use of a chemical you can buy at any drug store helped bring the Mercury capsule safely back to earth.

Shell reveals how the ingenious use of a chemical you can buy at any drug store helped bring the Mercury capsule safely back to earth.

ing we could do without.

First, the hydrogen peroxide discussed in this ad and used in the Project Mercury spacecraft was not a Shell product; it was from the Becco chemical division of Food Machinery & Chemical Corp.

In addition to this questionable approach, they go on to make the statement that the hydrogen peroxide attitude control system is essential for the safe conduct of the mission.

John H. Bickers, Manager of Advertising, McDonnell Aircraft Corp., St. Louis.

To the Editor: I am enclosing a copy of an advertisement placed for Shell Chemical...

The substance of the advertisement is that miniature jet rockets powered by hydrogen peroxide permitted the astronaut to steer the capsule.

However, the important point is that in the middle paragraph of the next to the last column, the copy says: "The oxygen came from liquid, highly concentrated hydrogen peroxide... of which Shell Chemical is one of the major producers."

peroxide required for this project.

Only the Becco chemical division, Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., has facilities to produce this, and is the exclusive supplier of this product to both McDonnell Aircraft, manufacturer of the capsule, and to Cape Canaveral.

Although nowhere in the ad does Shell actually say that it supplied the peroxide, certainly the inference is that they did.

It is an old cliché to end a letter such as this one with the statement that "It is advertising like this that gives all advertising a bad name."

David Levy, Account Executive, Ellington & Co., New York.

Chester Bowles Came to OPA With Lots of Basic Experience

To the Editor: Your May 1 issue contains a misstatement which I believe you will want to correct.

You report Mr. Masse as saying: "When Bowles was made OPA director in Washington he had not had any previous experience with the OPA either in local, regional or the Washington OPA offices to the best of my knowledge."

Since Mr. Masse was an OPA staffer in the Cleveland office, he must have been asleep on the job if he didn't know about Mr. Bowles. The real facts are these: Mr. Bowles was a volunteer member of his local rationing board in Mystic, Conn., from the earliest days of OPA.

When Mr. Bowles arrived in Washington, the OPA organization was up to its ears in difficulties and everyone from department heads to messengers were thrilled with the inspiring leadership and experience in wartime controls he brought to the bureau from his first day in office.

All of these facts should be known by Mr. Masse, and if he would like further documentation, I can recommend to him an article written by Mr. Bowles for the New York Times Magazine of Oct. 24, 1943, "Rationing Is Doing Its Job," which recounts some of his experiences with the OPA in the early days—when he was doing a dedicated job at the grass roots.

Robert Kaye, President, Agency Publishing Co., New York.

To the Editor: [With] all this chatter about Mr. Benton and Mr. Bowles, I well remember when they were the "boy wonders" in the advertising business—wonders because they got lucky, grabbed some good men and women who knew advertising and made millions. Saw a good chance to sell out and clean up and did it.

The New Deal was in full bloom so they got on the stem and went up and up. Got on public payrolls to make them still experts and criticized the business of advertising more and more.

I never gambled and won, but have been making a living for myself and family in newspaper work (advertising) for over 40 years.

By the way, if the present owners of Benton & Bowles would do a little thinking I feel sure they would drop their agency name and use their own—they certainly would retain their present clients and my guess would be they would have some new ones ask them to handle their business.

Advertising was okay when B&B were making millions, but now it's N.G. How crazy do they think all of us are?...

F. S. Hinman, Advertising Director, Register-Mail, Galesburg, Ill.

Article Dissecting Admen Interests Bankers, Too

To the Editor: As a regular reader and subscriber to ADVERTISING AGE I found myself very much interested in your series titled "A Sociologist Peers at Advertising Men," published in your March 27, April 3 and April 10 editions.

If this is available in reprint form I would appreciate your sending me a dozen copies for our management group.

As you may surmise, the study turned up a rather interesting profile of a banker and that, of course, is our primary interest.

John J. Barry, Vice-President, National Shawmut Bank of Chicago.

Sorry; there are no reprints available of the series, but copies of the articles are being sent to Mr. Barry.

Rockford Newspapers Pushed R.O.P. Color with Egg Mailing

To the Editor: We certainly enjoyed seeing the Gibson mailing in the May 1 ADVERTISING AGE, "Merchandising Ideas" pages. This same mailing, except for the message, was sent out Easter of 1960 by our client, Rockford Newspapers Inc., to advertising agencies across the nation. We presume the Gibson advertising department was following the good advice of Alexander Pope, "Be not the first by whom the new is tried, Nor yet the last to lay the old aside."

idea brought good results used a year later.

In that many times in our advertising experience we have found ourselves unwittingly coming up with an identical idea, we do not want to infer that Gibson Refrigerator Sales did not show complete originality in their promotion.

The Herald has more than twice the circulation of the second newspaper on weekdays, nearly three times as much on Sundays. It leads in department store lineage by a ratio of 2½ to 1, in grocery supermarket advertising by 3½ to 1. Compared with other newspapers in the country, The Herald is a leader in almost every category of advertising. It is third in the country in total advertising, first in retail grocery advertising, third in automotive and total retail advertising. And The Herald is second in total editorial lineage, too. Promise her anything but for God's sake give her something Actually it's no mere caprice to have two titles because everything I'm about to say falls either under the one title or the other. How to succeed in the cosmetic business without really lying refers to the advertising of your products—the words. And promise her anything but for God's sake give her something refers to the nature of your products themselves.

The cosmetic business came of age when it realized that the way to sell cosmetics to women was by combining showmanship with the truth. Not just the plain unvarnished facts, but the truth as women wish to hear it. You might call this age of cosmetics, which of course is the current and perhaps the permanent age, the Fire & Ice Age.

The basic proposition of the Fire & Ice Age is this: You can't sell cosmetics to a woman by telling her only the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. If you try, you're dead, because she doesn't want just the bald, naked truth. To be sure she wants the truth to be indubitably there, but she wants the truth to be both personalized and razz-matazzed. She wants to be entertained. And tantalized. And wooed. And won. And above all she wants to be led down the primrose path a little—as long as she knows that you know that she knows you're leading her down the primrose path a little.

Women Keep Changing Everything

The reason why a woman wants us to lead her on a little is that a woman spends a lot of time leading herself on a little. She wants a little immoral support.

For example, no woman is ever satisfied with her hair. Most women hate their hair. Any woman is ready at a moment's notice to change her hair—in the utterly groundless hope that she'll think the change is permanently for the better. Of course the change never is for the better, in her eyes, because whatever hair you have is the hair you want to change, and 'round and 'round you go and you never come out at all. Hairdo today, gone tomorrow.

So what is a girl going to do? Stop changing? Of course not. She's going to go right on changing everything. And all she wants is a little discreet but potent encouragement which, with luck, she'll get in just the right dose from the cosmetic industry.

Kay Daly

But the trouble, I think, is that the cosmetic industry is beginning to mix the dosage all wrong.

The industry seems to me to be stripping the truth too far down, or phony-ing the truth too far up. The industry seems to be turning showmanship into a morality play, or else a burlesque. The industry seems to be failing to lead a woman on enough or else trying to push her too fast.

Let's examine briefly the three p's of the cosmetic industry—product, promise and profit—and see if this is really so.

The other day one of my favorite cosmetic tycoons said: "The trouble with this business today is that nobody understands how high is up." Now what did he mean by that? I think he meant how far up—or how far into the ground—can you push a good thing? How high can we push the promises, and how low can we let the performance of the product fall?

He also meant how long can we make the same old promises about the same old products and expect women to swallow them? Are we building our business or killing our business by bringing out the same old nail enamel formula under a new name and telling women it will make their nails grow longer and stronger when we all know that it's the same old stuff and that it can't and it won't. When nothing new has been added to the product, and nothing new has been added to the already empty promise, nothing new has been added, at all, except grounds for divorce on the part of the customer for non-support of claims.

■ And by how high is up, I think he also meant that our business is no longer thinkable in terms of "instant gravy train." How much can we expect women to pay for the kind of treatment products that are flooding the market today, most of which seem to come from the secret waters of some dark primeval spring and which really went over the dam long ago? Today there must be a tighter correlation between profit margin and promise margin. You can't turn a gallon of nothing into a gallon of money.

Today women want to know more and they do know more. That's why they pay $25 for a facial analysis at Bendel's Gilded Cage—to find something out that they want to know. You can't simply cast about for new ways to pad the check. If you make a concrete promise—especially if you charge a great big concrete price—you'd better see that the product delivers.

The country has gotten wise to padding. Nobody flies first class anymore—at least when he himself is paying for it—because the benefits don't justify the markup—the rear end of the plane arrives simultaneously with the front end, and a couple of canapes and a glass of champagne don't make that much of a difference. That's why all the first class seats are empty. These days everybody is scrutinizing everything more. Just as the government is scrutinizing expense accounts more, women are scrutinizing cosmetic claims more. And everywhere everybody's getting a disallowance.

These days you can't do a lot of things you could have gotten away with once. The cosmetic industry has an historically high profit margin. Use the tradition but for heaven's sake don't abuse the tradition or it will melt away forever.

Cease and Desist Comes from Consumer, Not FTC

The government has become deeply interested in scrutinizing certain claims about certain cosmetic products, too. You know, the kind of product which promises not only miracles but double miracles. But the government could rest easy if only it realized that women are their own best regulatory body. The most formidable and final cease and desist never comes from the FTC but always comes eventually if not now from the consumer herself—who in the face of extravagant claims will tell you to desist and desist, or, in plain English, to drop dead, and you may.

So—how do you know how far you can go? Can research provide the answer? Well, at Norman, Craig & Kummel, where I work, we're up to our ears in research. Our backbones are stiffened by Starch, and we're always galloping off in all the right directions with Gallup-Robinson. We're constantly swearin' by Schwerin. We sometimes turn an eager ear to the dicta of Dr. Dichter. We have such profound respect for the semantic differential that the very last thing on earth you could call us is anti-semantic.

In all seriousness, you've got to be committed and dedicated to all the research methods today to stay alive. But we've been in the cosmetic business a long time and we've learned—partly through research—what we instinctively knew, anyhow—that cosmetic research can tell you what a woman wanted and bought yesterday, but not what she'll want and buy tomorrow.

■ A woman always has a restless unformulated desire for some new excitement which it is your chore to isolate and articulate for her. She can't tell you what it is, but if it's right she'll recognize it when you present it to her properly. Ours is still primarily a business of hunches and enlightened intuition. Look around today. The people who have made the cosmetic business into a big business are the people who don't just face facts—they angel-face them. The people who have made the cosmetic business big are the people who are still full of heaven-sent hunches; who, even when research doesn't show it, still insist that the grass is always bluer in the next pasture; who realize—even though the business is big as big steel—that it's still a matter of touch and glow.

Now let's get a little personal. Because in the cosmetic business you daren't let yourself get impersonal, which is happening. If you're a cosmetics company president you can't count on staff work, like the Pentagon. You can't departmentalize and compartmentalize and delegate and relegate. Your business can't perpetuate itself, it can't even run itself. If you're president you've always got to be minding the store, like the proprietor of a giant delicatessen who's always on hand personally to change the salami hanging in the window.

The cosmetic business—like the fashion business—has to be so nimble that you can't afford a vast hierarchy and lower-archy up and down through which intelligence slowly filters. Unlike the fashion business, single cosmetic companies have become big enough for Wall Street to become interested in them—which makes it even harder for the president to retain his personal involvement in the cosmeticness of his company. Wall Street, of course, never thought cosmetics would make it as big business. But Wall Street has already made a lot of money in cosmetics, together, of course, with all the crow it can eat.

You can't sell cosmetics to a woman by telling "the whole truth and nothing but," leading cosmetics copywriter Kay Daly insists. "She doesn't want just the bald, naked truth. The ads must be fun." With that in mind, Miss Daly gave a rollicking speech, complete with fun and some "naked truth" about women's wiles and buying habits, at a spring meeting of the Fashion Group of New York. The speech is reproduced here almost in its entirety.

Tuition or Intuition?

Cosmetic advertising grows less effective the further the advertising agency is removed from the personalities who founded or really run the business. The agency's chore would be so much lighter—and the results so much brighter—if the luxury of working with the boss weren't fast perishing from the earth.

Which leads us to the next part of my talk, which is subtitled:

tuition or intuition

can you afford to put all those horn-rimmed, crew-cut, method-trained young men from the Harvard School of Business into positions of authority in a business which is more madness than method?

■ Each of us knows at least two dozen specimens of this clean-cut crew-cut species. You know, when Hermione Gingold was asked what she thought of Elsa Maxwell, Miss Gingold replied: "Elsa Maxwell?—just another pretty face." Well, all the bright young Harvard School of Business men are somehow indistinguishable from each other—each really is just another pretty face. This beautiful breed of young business manhood today does well in big lumbering corporations where good manners and methodology and never doing anything wrong—or right—is an asset.

But to our personal and increasing alarm we find these methodists showing up all over the place in this, the gutsiest and fastest moving business on the face of the earth. And wherever we find this type showing up we find it slowing up.

■ Now what do you do when your business gets so big that you can't stir up the lipstick—and your advertising agency—yourself anymore? You must find young people who have the intuition as well as just plain tuition—or you'll eventually come to a grinding halt. And how do you find these rare intuitive young men? Well, that takes a little intuition, too—but that's all right. You must have the intuition or you wouldn't have gotten where you are.

Women Are Nutty

All men in the cosmetic industry, of whatever age and whatever education, have to be watched. It's tough for men of any age or training to understand what women think. Women are a little nutty. You either accept women's nuttiness and turn it to advantage, or you don't stay in the cosmetic business. No man can move women emotionally unless he has some kind of female quotient or square root or common denominator of his own. Too many men—even in our industry—are certain that the way to inject a feminine note into an ad—to hit women where they live—is to put an orchid corsage in a celluloid box on the back seat of the Buick.

■ One of the other difficulties of men—whom I adore, by the way—is that they are also congenitally inclined to confuse what's for kicks and what's for keeps as far as women generally are concerned. And they carry their confusion undiluted into cosmetics. But you can't confuse what's for kicks—like a wild new lipstick color that's bought purely for the sheer fun of it—with a thoroughly serious for-keeps product like an anti-wrinkle cream that's bought for the sheer need of it.

■ You can put half a million dollars into lightheartedly promoting a new color and every cent of it will be well spent. If you give her a lift she'll love you for it and she'll buy it and that's all she expects for her money. But you can spend that much promising a tangible result in a no-kidding area, and if you don't deliver something you're in trouble.

Furthermore, even when kicks are appropriate there's a good deal of confusion about how high to kick. It seems to me in recent seasons that many color promotions have become parodies of previous color promotions. There must be some new way to lure the ladies into the stores to pounce on a new shade of pink. But how often can the same words be rewritten, the same song resung? How long can the same feline female in the glittering gold pants stretch out on the same marble floor reaching for the grapes or the cherries or the kumquats without reaching the point of parody?

■ The crucial point that's being missed is this: the original great color promotions were done with tongue very much in cheek. And somehow, somewhere, in the past few years people are further distending the already too far distended cheek, which now becomes broad farce and burlesque and, like satire, tends to close on Saturday night. This awareness may escape the horn-rimmed young men with lots of tuition, but no intuition. They may not dig the difference—but the difference is devastatingly different to women. You simply can't fool a female with labored rehashments of what began as a subtle spoof.

They Never Stop Looking for a New Look

Yet, in spite of all my downmanship, our business happens to be always on the upbeat, really. The cosmetic business is almost a depression and recession-proof business because of the fact that women are eternally restless. Women loathe status quo. They'll never stop looking for a new look, and they'll never be satisfied with it when they find it.

■ But you can't be greedy. Women's foibles are your future, her face is your fortune, but you can't laugh in her face. You can't expect her to swallow an outlandish absurdity. Even though you say what you say with fun and flair there's got to be foundation in fact. She can't ever get the funny feeling you're fooling. She can't ever get the impression, from the outlandishness of the promises, that meanwhile back at the lab you're dying laughing. Because if you aren't careful you can really die laughing—at least if you're laughing at her.

It's part of the paradox of the cosmetic business that you have to have laughter—but the right kind of laughter—in your ads because the ads must be fun. And you can't hardly have fun without laughing. As a matter of fact, sex is the only way to have fun without laughing.

Keep Laughing

No, keep the good clean fun and the lilted light-hearted laughter, but never, never lie. If you can't promise concrete benefits, don't feel that you have to invent them. Having benefits isn't even necessary. But you must give her some sort of personal reward. Other industries are learning this rock bottom truth. Quaker Oats has learned it. You might think that Quaker Oats, of all companies, could promise concrete benefits by the carload. Yet in the current Quaker Oats campaign not one single concrete benefit is promised or alluded to. I quote from the Quaker Oats ad in the March McCall's.

A mother is talking, in 24-point type, about serving her school-age daughter Quaker Oats for breakfast. She says: "It warms her up inside, and gives her something extra to keep going on." Now who would think that the flashy cosmetic industry could learn from Quaker Oats? But that's exactly what we've got to do, too—"warm her up inside and give her something extra to keep going on."

■ I will close with a brief poem. Keep a sharp ear for the rhymes because they will be almost impossible to recognize:

You can't promise a girl a trip to the moon and then let her down in Levittown, Pennsylvania—if ads make a fool of her she may just pick up a twenty-seven dollar and fifty cent jar of your product and brain ya.

If you write cosmetic advertising you have to resist the temptation to lie a little or indulge in magician's slight-of-hand or hat tricks—particularly if your Madison Avenue office, like mine, looks down on the roof of St. Patrick's.

You can lead the old gray mare back to the thermal waters of a secret spring in France but you can't make her drink because believe it or not in the last thirty years women have actually learned to think.

Fantastic product claims can be made today only if your lab can come up with a bona fide miracle; you can't expect your advertising agency to make a silk purse from a sow's ear—or to make a square product spherical.

You see, ads are written by fools like David Ogilvy and me—but even David can't make a tree—although I admit that Rosser Reeves just might be able to make the leaves. #

Letter from a Young Man in Advertising

By Kenneth Groesbeck
Advertising Agency Consultant

I am an account executive, considering a job with another advertising agency. My primary functions will be contacting, planning, and developing new business. Your breakdown of 5-2-3-2-3 is being applied to determine my remuneration. Besides the 15% this agency receives, it also receives a fixed fee from most of the accounts I would handle...

Kenneth Groesbeck

My questions are these: (1) What would be an equitable arrangement for my remuneration from fees of the present accounts in the agency that I will contact, etc.? (2) What should be my portion, if any, of the fee from new business I might acquire for the agency?

This is a very reputable agency. They have offered me a little more than 1/2 of the fee for my services. But, I would rather start out right, even though it may be less than their offer, and therefore prevent any future discord.

■ While this young man's question is interesting and important, and I am answering it as well as I can below, I am sure all of you will agree that the last sentence in his letter is so unusual as to merit the closest possible consideration.

Here, if you please, is an Indiana youngster concerned primarily with the future welfare and satisfaction of his prospective employer, rather than his own.

I assume he is young—I don't know him and he doesn't tell me—but young or old, this man will go far, whose problem, as he sees it, is fairness to the other guy first.

And now to do what I can with his questions.

The 5-2-3-2-3 formula he mentions is, as most of you know, the suggested breakdown of agency expenditures into the five divisions of Overhead, Contact, Plans and Copy, New Business, and Profit. Assuming the agency grosses 15%, it may wisely spend the suggested percentages totalling this amount and do a good job of financial housekeeping.

■ Our friend asks, how should these portions vary in cases where the receipt of fees by the agency increases the gross income to a percentage higher than 15%? Many agencies, as we know, gross 20% or more in relation to total billing. They have to, costs being what they are.

I would say, stick to the same proportions.

Thus if an agency agrees with me that new business is worth 2% of yearly billing, when and as received, but this particular billing grosses not 15% but 20%, the agency can afford to spend 2.6% rather than 2%.

This account executive is to be paid, he says, according to my breakdown summarized above.

■ Fair remuneration will be preserved if the agency pays him for his services, be they Contact, Creative, or New Business, the percentages suggested. He says they have offered him "a little more than 1/2 of the fee" for his services. I am not sure what he means by this, but I imagine it is 5/15, or 1/3 of the gross income. If so, it is on the low side rather than the high one. For the combined services he mentions, most agencies will gladly pay a total of 7/15. The 7 is made up of New Business, 2; Copy, 3; Contact, 2.

However—and this is important—the account executive's contribution is not always so clear-cut and well-defined as this. Suppose he plans campaigns only, but someone else writes them? Suppose the boss goes along when he lands a new account? Reductions in the suggested percentages in relation to billing which an agency should pay must be made when the employe gets help in his work, whatever it is. The time of other individuals, including that of the agency owner, must go into any calculation of agency expenses.

■ As you all know, I am not entirely happy about salaries based on splits in the commissions received by the agency. About all that can be said in favor of this procedure, which is so common in our business, is that it is better than re-

FACT: In 1960 SPORTS ILLUSTRATED ranked 2nd among all magazines in pages of Beer, Wine and Liquor advertising

Not surprising, when you look at the 950,000 families who read SPORTS

ILLUSTRATED every week. They're young (median household head age: 42—one of the lowest of all magazines) and they're substantial (median income: $10,835—one of the highest). They entertain frequently and well (last year they had some 210 million guests on occasions when drinks were appropriate).

Above all they are active, social and sophisticated. If they weren't, they'd hardly be reading the kind of contemporary magazine SPORTS ILLUSTRATED is.

More than 76% of SI families serve liquor in their homes; more than 75% serve beer; more than 60% serve wine.

That's why 90 different brands are currently being advertised in SPORTS ILLUSTRATED, to reach one of America's best markets for beer, wine and liquor.

SI is a basic buy.

muneration based on comparative bargaining power. At least it has some foundation in fact, a formula an agency can follow without going broke.

What an individual is worth to an agency and what the agency can afford to pay may well be two very different figures. What we seek to set is some standard to start from. What we seek to avoid is such a statement as was reported to me last week made by a job applicant: "I can't live on less than $18,000."

Contrast this with our friend's "I would rather start out right."

Copy of all this by mail to our inquirer. If I haven't answered all his questions, further queries from him will be welcomed. He seems worth answering. Don't you agree? #

Think Small

By E. B. Weiss

As this nation moves toward a population of 200,000,000, with a gross annual product of uncountable billions, the so-called "national" market becomes even more of an illusion than it happens to be right now for by far the majority of national advertisers.

Precious few national advertisers have true national distribution — true national sales. But traditionally we tend to think big—and, presumably, the national market is the big market for all and sundry.

Maybe the time is coming—if, indeed, it is not already here—when it will profit many advertisers to think small! However, the economic validity of this circumstance will be comprehended too seldom (and too late) by many marketers unless and until they shed the habit of years of automatically assuming that the marketing objective for every item in the line or added to the line is the national market.

This does not necessarily imply that the market objective should be local or sectional—although that could very well be the case in some instances. In a multiplying number of programs, however, it will involve setting up a segment of the shopulation as the logical target. Since derivatives of the word "fraction" are becoming almost as popular in "marketese" as the word "image," perhaps this marketing approach will be called "fractionated" marketing. I presume that sounds a bit more professionally impressive than "segmented" markets.

I prefer "think small" markets and marketing.

I suspect that "think small" marketing will assume a larger role in marketing not only because our population has become so huge, not only because our total national income is so gigantic—but also because very often there is apt to be a potential for a better net profit in think-small marketing than in national marketing. That won't be the case always, of course; but I do believe it will be the case in a growing number of instances.

National marketing bears some resemblance to the situation in mass retailing under which it has been assumed, for decades, that more retail volume assured more retail profits. The department stores were the first to fall into this economic trap. They have since been joined by the variety chains, the drug chains, the food chains. All of these chains have reached out for volume. They got volume. But with mighty few exceptions, their net profit performances have been shockingly poor and their return on investment even worse.

Similarly, a high percentage of merchandise lines seem to take the position that, once a dimly defined objective called "national distribution" is achieved, the net profit showing will automatically become highly satisfactory. That philosophy has not been much more sound than the more-and-still-more-volume philosophy of so many of our giant retailers.

It has turned out to be a questionable marketing philosophy for at least two reasons: 1. Few brands have ever achieved true national distribution and sales. 2. When so-called "national" brands are actually distributed and sold on a hop-skip-and-jump basis over the nation, total marketing costs tend to be uneconomically high.

Other reasons are also propelling some manufacturers toward the think-small market. For example, there is something of a reverse-the-field marketing trend in the appliance field, both for major appliances and for traffic appliances. Several manufacturers in both ends of the appliance industry have recently introduced special lines which are priced for limited markets and which are being distributed in a limited way.

The expectation is that these think-small lines may be merchandised with a minimum of the frenzied marketing that is so typical of the total appliance industry. (Very likely these moves were also at least partly inspired by the solid success of Magnavox which aimed specifically at segments of the tv market rather than at the whole market spectrum.)

I believe that more new-product planning will involve the consideration of new items for segmented markets. This would be something of a departure because the tendency certainly has been to contemplate new items primarily from the standpoint of their potentials in the national market. I believe also there will be something of a tendency to shrink the total geographical area involved in the disbursement of the total marketing budget in connection with existing lines having so-called "national distribution."

Perhaps also there will develop a new philosophy which will label as the "national" market any reasonably sizable market segment!

Thus the "national" market for gourmet foods would probably consist of distribution in only a percentage of food outlets and would consist primarily of families with above-average income. To select an arbitrary figure, the total market for gourmet foods for the next several years may involve no more than 20% of our families—but for gourmet foods that would constitute the national market.

Really, this is not so much a case of "think small" as it is a case of "think rationally." There is little question that thinking nationally in traditional images has led too many manufacturers into economically irrational programs. #

What They Were Saying 25 Years Ago . . .

Statement of Saturday Evening Post executives, in launching a monthly series to counteract the "sweeping censure" of advertising (AA, April 20, 1936):

"Don't think it isn't being attacked. Derogation of advertising, of advertised products and of every business that advertises has moved from the stage of occasional wisecracks to organized calumny.

"From the halls of Congress to the platform of the village woman's club these things are being said: 'Advertised products cost too much; advertising loads the price of merchandising; only the second rate is ever advertised; advertising does not tell the truth; advertising is an economic waste and a tax on the consumer.'"

FRESH AIR

America is a young place that never had an adolescence. From the sunny, July morning in Philadelphia when those men from the 13 Colonies signed Mr. Jefferson's document, we have been a world power facing adult problems.

The world has grown smaller. The power greater. Scales have tipped. Now our smallest action stirs a schoolroom in the Himalayas, echoes down a rural road in Africa, rouses a political meeting in...

Wherever peace and freedom are an issue, we are too. But what do others think? Are we a tyranny or final hope? Friend or blundering giant? Thomas Jefferson's ideal or a materialistic dealer? What do they think?

The CBS Owned Radio Stations recently brought fresh air to this question in a series of four programs called "The Anatomy of Freedom." To see ourselves as the new generations in Asia, Europe and the rest of the world see us, WCAU—CBS Radio in Philadelphia—commissioned Dr. William W. Tomlinson, Vice President of Temple University, to circle the globe and seek out the views of men and women of stature both in the United States and abroad, who are aware of the danger to free men everywhere should America falter in its course under the soft oppression of indifference and neglect. The manager of each of the seven CBS Owned Radio Stations across America personally introduced the first broadcast on his own station. CBS news analyst, Robert Trout, was narrator for the series. What we heard was not all pleasant:

"I must admit that America hasn't so much spiritual appeal—spiritual attraction—to the young people in general in Japan..."*

"... I believe that I express the Asian point of view when I say, that to us—what is important is not so much which nation sends the first rocket to the moon... to us, what is important is, which nation organizes its house best... and shows respect for the fundamental human values more than any country. That to us is the nation that will lead, and should lead and must lead the world."

These ideas were aired on "The Anatomy of Freedom" over the CBS Owned Radio Stations. Idea broadcasting that keeps the air fresh with adult, informative programming. Which is why people really listen to

Merry, Merry Month of May: Madness That Moves Merchandise

The McMahan Tv Commercials Library, an analytical service now offered to agencies and advertisers, will be adapted as a short-reel series of visual aids and "case histories" for use in teaching advertising, marketing and production, starting next September. Universities and adclubs interested in such teaching tools are invited to communicate with Mr. McMahan, c/o ADVERTISING AGE.

By Harry W. McMahan

This year the merry, merry month of May is practically splitting its side. The commercial side, that is. (The program side is still pretty dull . . .)

Some of tv's program clowns, like Skelton, like Benny, would love to earn a laugh track as uproarious as some of the honest yuks these commercials get these days. Chuckle my cash register but selling hasn't been as much fun since Madame DuBarry tickled the secrets out of Louie Five-and-Ten.

Harry W. McMahan

Now, we've spake our piece a time or two about commercials designed for laughs rather than sales. —But excuse the present company. These deliver the message with a boffola. And sales. Here blends the tinkle of laughter along with the tunkle of coins in the till.

Jax and Better, to Open

Jax beer (Jackson Brewing Co.), down New Orleans way, for instance.

Wouldn't you think if anyone was going to use Mike Nichols & Elaine May, they'd use 'em on camera? Not Jax beer. Not Doherty, Clifford, Steers & Shenfield, its new agency.

Nope, they just recorded their voices, ad libbing. Trimmed 'em down to length. Then cartooned 'em.

The animation (by Pelican) has its own wit. The design (by Hal Gerhardt, Modri Gerstein), is a fresh and distinctive two-tone of grays and blacks. The selling theme (by Bill Wall of DCS&S), is in the groove.

Each of the dozen or so spots is a funny thing. There's no continuity, as a series. (Jax is so all-over-the-place it isn't necessary.) Some of the gags may be recognizable, but who cares?

Sales are up. Distributors are flipping their six-pax, Jax. New outlets are opening. The brewery has been so swamped with viewer calls they now run an ad listing the schedules of the commercials on the tv page . . .

In radio, they're going for a three-minute spot (and so are stations, on a 1½ rate!). Title: "Jax Beer Party." Here, interspersed with the bouncy music of Don Elliott, are snatches of conversation one might hear at a party—only they're the tidbit highlights of the Nichols & May tv tracks . . .

Needless to say, Jax is finding this the first tv commercial campaign that appeals equally well to Dallas suburbia, bayou backwoodsia and the heavy Negro market in New Orleans. Pretty cagey, huh?

Narragansett beer, up in New England, is reported to have bought the same idea from DCS&S. And it seems highly likely, we'd guess, the agency will entice another regional beer or two with the same idea. Beer should be so much fun . . .

Chun King, Funnee Story . . .

On the live action side, Chun King has a side-splitting money maker of its own. It's a Stan Freberg. And that's a good way to start an argument.

Agencies (most of 'em) hate Mr. Freberg's guts. After all, he's preempting their creative prerogatives and that's a pretty touchy spot for an agency to get itself preempted in.

Advertisers (most of 'em) like Mr. Freberg. He has a wit that pays off at the cash register.

So you can get an argument. Stan's new radio spots for Cheerios are great. Stan's new radio spots for Butternut coffee are atrocious. Stan's Kaiser Foil tv spots opened 43,000 new outlets. Stan's Chun King spots goosed up business 40% in tv markets.

You pays your money (lots of it!) and takes your choice.

Prize of the Chun King series is the "elevator" spot. Man enters crowded elevator and addresses the upgoing assemblage on the merits of not being slaves to habit. He refuses to face the front, himself. He harangues them on food, suggests they break the American food habit of sameness: Try a little light Oriental food for a change.

Of course, he has no personal interest, he insists, as he backs out of the elevator and through a door liberally marked "Chun King." —Cut back to the elevator and its giggling passengers . . . all Orientals . . .

It's a funny spot. It gets the message across. It sells.

Unscrambling the Eggheads

Still in the merry-merry month, it's fun to see the Aluminium "man-and-wife" commercial cropping up again.

■ This is an intriguing use of humor to accomplish an institutional job: explain why "Aluminium" has that extra "i" in it, relate to the program vehicle, "Omnibus," and the while warm up the corporate image with a friendly sense of humor.

The technique is cartoon, and again we find the voices from two show business stars: Howard Morris as the patient husband trying to explain to his wife how "Aluminium" makes aluminum; Kaye Ballard as the wife who comes through dim-witted comprehension to save the day, finally, when hubby trips on "Omnibus."

This is a perfectly delightful little classic that should be around for several seasons. JWT is the agency. Group, Detroit, produced.

Felicitootions!

Volkswagen For-Funning

We've commented before about Detroit's tired automotive advertising this season. With rare exceptions, it's dreadful.

Volkswagen continues to outmaneuver most of 'em on the streets, in sales and in advertising (tv, print and outdoor).

Doyle Dane Bernbach has another VW commercial in their deft, delightful, breezy style. It's a voiced-over guessing game with a little girl's "What is it . . . seats nine people with all their stuff? . . . is more fun than a convertible? . . ." and so on. Clever camera angles reveal just enough to intrigue as the story rolls on with the load of youngsters going to the beach. At the end our little pig-tailed gap-toothed heroine rushes into camera with the answer: "It's my daddy's Volkswagen station wagon, silly . . ."

Incidental footnote on VW's sales: In 1960, it sold 185,000 units (up from 150,- 000). In January, 1961, it swept on to a plurality in sales over the foreign car field: 52% (up from 29%). Renault, its nearest competitor, meanwhile dropped 71% from its comparable '60 figure. And, of the American compacts, VW outsold Comet, Valiant, Tempest and Lark. No small feat.

No small brain-power, either. Just how many agencies could have done such a thoughtful job of selling this ungainly little bug—Hitler's People's Wagon—against all the odds of Detroit's research to the American public?

They used to say VW succeeded because it had the magic of "foreign car." In view of the general fiasco in that area these days, what say now?

I say: Great advertising . . . in all media.

Coffees of Colombia: Sequel

Add satire to May's merriment. It's a commercial in happy parody of the David Susskind "Open End" show and it's for Manger Hotel coffee in the New York market. Title: "Either End."

Jack Guilford is the star but the technique is the surprise. Still photos videotaped to the zany panel's sound track make for much of the amusement. The Wexton Co. did it at NTA Telestudios.

Incidentally, this is one of the new coffees now featuring the Coffees of Colombia blend. Proof enough the campaign of "Juan Valdez" in print and tv last year paid off. This Colombia campaign is renewing and extending its markets this year. It even will try its hand in Europe. Not bad results for an "institutional" campaign.

Funny Technique

Bugs are always a problem (maybe VW brought up the subject!) and insect sprays don't have it easy getting on tv.

Cartoons, yes. Live action, no.

But Isotox, out California way, comes up with a new solution: Third-dimensional bugs in stop motion, with an animation design setting.

Real "beat" music and language makes the sound track.

Imagination Inc., San Francisco, came up with the technique. John Magnuson wrote and produced for McCann-Erickson, same city.

Favorite Cereal Stories

We're a bit behind on all the commercials we'd like to review in this column. There's a backlog of about two dozen good ones including several in our favorite field of cereals.

Post has a great new audio-visual effect in "Shucks" and General Mills is doing sharp selling with its Trix Rabbit, but we'll hold those till another month.

Overdue for a bow is "Who, the Wizard of Oatz" for Kellogg's All Stars. We especially like a recent twist in this campaign in which Who (who but Cyril Ritchard?) explains his task of putting the holes in the All Stars. He asks for audience help. Alakasm!

"Egad! What a large one!" or maybe "My word! Somebody hiccuped!" (as a double hole appears). The trick is that the same commercial was made with five variations in that particular sequence.

Another cutie from Kellogg's is a commercial called "What to Buy." There's a bright little youngster, in live action, about to pick a cereal in the supermarket. The five cartoon characters on the five Kellogg pre-sweet packages vie for his favor. Each, from Tony, the Tiger, to "Who," tells the merits of his product.

Amidst this misery of choice a happy solution comes as our young man picks the Snack-Pak which contains all five.

High Wattage from Mr. Magoo

One final entry in the May funfest: Mr. Magoo.

Here's another great story of print and tv integration, with a rousing sales success.

GE's agency, BBDO, has done an artful job of guiding this established cartoon character into advertising usage. The print ads rack up top "read most" scores. The commercials have a load of entertainment value—but never miss the selling message.

Whether the near-sighted Mr. Magoo is a political candidate, a cosmonaut to the moon (this was a "to be continued" commercial, in two parts) or a hayseed farmer, he's always illuminating the message of the new GE bulbs.

Live action inserts embellish with a demonstration, now and again, and an "eye-chart" that says "It's Easy to See the Best Bulbs Are G-E" is sure to get worked in somewhere along the way.

Sales results of the print-tv Magoo campaign are called sensational.

"Mister Magoo is the greatest thing that ever happened to bulb sales," is the word from Martin King of GE. "By every standard he is tops in interest, impact and play-back."

UPA is the licensee for Magoo. Jim Backus, as always, is the near-sighted voice.

—So much for the merry, merry month of May.

Employe Communications ...

Multi-Company Employe Paper Makes Bow

By Robert Newcomb and Marg Sammons

An unusual approach to the problem of employe communication in the small or medium-size plant has recently emerged from the communicative brain of Kerker-Peterson, Minneapolis advertising agency. It may suggest a solution to the problem faced by many small concerns with the zeal to publish an employe journal but without the wherewithal to do it individually as well as they think it should be done.

This development in employe journalism has taken place at the Science Industry Center, located on a 190-acre site in suburban New Hope, north of Minneapolis. The project is patterned after Stanford Industrial Park in Palo Alto, Calif., set in appealing surroundings and designed to offer an attractive working environment. Four companies are already established in the center, and probably two dozen will be located there, it is planned, when the project is completed.

The desirability of cooperative communication became apparent when it was realized that individual companies of the center will frequently be associated in joint proposals, and will often supply products and services to one another. The sponsors of the modest but effective four-page "News" feel that a complete understanding of operations of neighboring companies will be helpful to all, and this is what the publication is designed to provide.

The first issue took up the progress report of the project itself, discussed housing, transportation and joint recreational activities. As the number of residential industries increases, the sponsors plan to broaden the editorial base and to grow along with the project itself by covering the news and personnel. International Properties, which developed the plan, is sponsoring the first few issues—with a strong assist from Kerker-Peterson—but it is expected that shortly a committee of companies will take over direction of the publication. The agency wisely chose an experienced industrial editor to pilot the job—Rhoda Jacobs, formerly with Minneapolis-Honeywell.

The idea of a cooperative employe publication of this type suggests a number of practical advantages. Through sharing the cost of the journal, the participating companies buy for themselves a professionally edited job, something they probably feel would be unwarranted otherwise. With professional direction and responsibility, the publication promises to appear on schedule, whereas the paper handled as a part-time function of an overloaded personnel department runs the risk of quick self-extinction.

Opponents of the cooperative publication idea will point out that the participating companies tend to lose their identity, that the project becomes a commercial paper instead of a publication for employes. Possibly, but the first issue of the center's "News" doesn't indicate it. The reader gets the impression that quite a few people with common interests have gone into the publishing business together, to talk about the things that interest them and all their employes. Along with the news there's a lot of neighborliness in it. The paper seems to be encouraging the readers not only to know the participating companies better, but to get on a friendly footing with the people who work for them. #

The Professionally Competent Institutional Ad

By Clyde Bedell

This ad was run 'way down under. Sydney is Australia's largest city. David Jones is Sydney's greatest store. And it's Australia's greatest prestige department store. I have reproduced an ad or two from this store in the past.

The woman who heads up promotion and advertising here started working in the store as a mail girl in (Sir) Charles Lloyd Jones' office (head of the store) when she was 14 years old. That was a great many years ago. But her advertising is as fresh and competent as any young person's.

The ad first quotes attendance figures at a tennis match (in Australia, what else?), at the races (naturally), and at Bondi Beach (two days after Christmas. That's when you get your suntan in the antipodes). These figures range from 15,500 to over 50,000 people.

Then it says: "but, more, more came to David Jones'. On one single day last week DJ's was visited by no less than 103,000 people . . . It's nice to remain top attraction against all sorts of outdoor competition, and to our loyal fans we say thank you, and call again as often as you can."

but, more, more came to David Jones'

copy on services and the store's guarantee. Down the right-hand side, under the "if you want" headings are such items as

"woven name tags for your children's

All That Art and No Copy

Just take a swish-hugger man a few feet at the refrigerator, a glass of cold milk and you're his neighbor. No one needs this advertisement! It's a job to be done, with no end in sight. Many employees in retail stores are not satisfied with their work. They want to be better paid and have more responsibility. They want to be better paid and have more responsibility. They want to be better paid and have more responsibility.

HERE'S TO YOUR HEALTH... WITH THE GREATEST MIXER OF THEM ALL! REFRESHING... NATURALLY DELICIOUS... AND IT'S A GOLD MINE OF VITAMIN C! PURE GRAPEFRUIT JUICE FROM FLORIDA!

ONE DELICIOUS FLAVOR

As observed in this column previously, the art boys, these days, are really giving the copy boys a run for their money. Take these three ads. The art work is superb. But what do they leave you with after the intriguing art work has caught your vision and your curiosity?

The extra value, the extra goodness you always get when the label says Swift's Premium . . . The greatest mixer of them all . . . The smoothest whiskey this side of Canada.

Certainly no one can claim these ads are objectionable. But neither are they persuasive, convincing. In fact, they say practically nothing at all. Their sole contribution to further the sales of the advertisers who paid for the space in which they appear is to leave a pleasant but fast fading impression.

Where are the great copy men today—aside from those who waste their time running agencies? Modern writers seem capable of only two things—writing meaningless copy to go with well-done art work; or writing copy so poorly done as to incur the wrath of the Federal Trade Commission. Little ability is required to achieve either of these ends. And it's little ability that these ads reflect. #

a mud pack, a bubble bath

then by all means

Advertising is usually fun to do when you can be imaginative and different. It is fun that's profitable to an advertiser, however, only when in addition to being imaginative and different, one is also doing the advertiser a lot of good. This ad is in the best tradition of much-loved stores talking intimately and enthusiastically to their customers. #

"WHAT RECESSION?"

The Southern farmer can afford to smile and ask that question. In fact, today, when markets across the nation are generally cutting costs, the Southern farmer can afford to buy just about anything he wants for farm and family.

The proof is in the figures: The South's cash farm income rose more than $229 MILLION in 1960 to an all-time high of $10,309,576,000.00! Adding farm income from all sources, this total goes up to an estimated $13½ BILLION. That's a huge roll of spending money — even for a big, booming 16-state market!

Are you getting your share of this rich farm market? The surest way is through the advertising pages of The Progressive Farmer. You reach 1,408,000 subscriber families . . . over 5,770,000 readers, most of them virtually exclusive to The Progressive Farmer. For example, The Progressive Farmer adds over 2½ MILLION unduplicated readers to the combination of Life, Look and The Saturday Evening Post.

So—beat the recession! Start now to let The Progressive Farmer help you sell where they're buying—in the rural South.

What Next for This Versatile Gal?

By Dick Neff

Weil, DOES She?

That ever-changing "Miss" Clairol girl is being seen with younger and younger men all the time.

"Does she or doesn't she?" the ads used to ask, with "Miss" Clairol, a sexy-looking doll if we ever saw one, peering out meaningfully from under her mascara.

Then to make it crystal clear that the headline's phraseology was conceived with only the purest of motives and that it referred only to "Miss" Clairol's hair, they had her rubbing noses with a young man who was either the luckiest and probably most unappreciative ten-year-old brat who ever got to pose with a real, live, grown-up ex-Camp Fire Girl, or the most cleverly made-up midget who ever put one over on the casting department.

Naturally, a few wise guys started asking questions about her robbing the cradle, so the makers of Miss Clairol apparently decided to make their pure intentions even more unmistakable.

The ad shown here accomplishes that all right, but it has us wondering just where it will all end. If this keeps on, they'll be showing her in an interesting-looking condition soon—and changing the headline to "Is she . . . or isn't she?"

Ad-ecdoté Dept.

Pawing through our ad-ecdoté file we came up with this one the other day, from one Walter V. Grow of Camp White, Ore.:

"A valued client in the Stocton advertising agency where I worked as an apprentice artist was the Italian-born owner of a macaroni products company. Usually, we worked with his local business manager, but for some reason Mr. Baldini himself was supervising our designing of his new labels.

"Ralph Storm, the art director, had drawn up several 'roughs' of the projected labels, which featured a slender, smiling brunette cradling a sheaf of ripe wheat in her arms. But design after design failed to please Mr. Baldini. Since what little English he spoke was heavily laid Italian accent, all we could make out of his dissatisfaction was, 'She's-a no' pretty.'

"The third unfruitful conference left us ready to send for an interpreter or a straitjacket (and Mr. Baldini seemed to think the straitjacket might be fitting apparel for the entire staff).

"While Mr. Storm was helping the macaroni maker into his coat, I glanced out the window and noticed his waiting automobile . . . and in it Mrs. Baldini. Five-thousand watt inspiration suddenly glowed, and I reached for the rejected label drawing Mr. Storm had laid down.

"A moment later I caught his eye and he came over to my drawing board, 'Try this,' I urged him.

"Mr. Baldini's head bobbed in enthusiastic approval. 'She's-a pretty,' he beamed.

"The only change was in the girl's slender figure.

How Silly Can You Get?

By James D. Woolf
Advertising Consultant

I think I know a little about shoe advertising. I not only began my business career as a sales clerk in a retail shoe store, but I have since directed the advertising on two national women's shoe accounts. Never have I seen a shoe ad as idiotic as the Mademoiselle ad as shown here. Not only is the reason for the picture beyond my powers of comprehension, but the headline—"Mademoiselle the lovable shoe"—simply slays me. Get it? Lovabull! How imbecilic can you get?

Women buy their shoes on the basis of style, comfort and price. By no stretch of the imagination is this ridiculous bull a symbol suggestive of any of these virtues. It certainly isn't a symbol of fashion and elegance; it has no connotation whatever of quality. This ad is nothing more or less than a desperate bid for attention, but it won't sell shoes. It is just plain silly. #

Increased readership means increased response to advertising. The Herald Tribune was the only New York weekday newspaper to gain in Total Advertising for the month of April and for the first four months of 1961.

South Dakota Names Broyles

PIERRE, S. D., May 16—The South Dakota highway department has awarded its publicity division account to Galen E. Broyles Advertising, Denver. The account has been billing at the rate of $175,000, of which about $143,000 is commissionable.

Ironically, the Broyles agency was the only one of the ten contenders which did not make a presentation to the commission last April 6 (AA, April 10). Although it was invited to make a presentation, the agency declined originally because of the objection of a client. Later, the objection was withdrawn and Broyles reentered the competition and made an account-winning presentation.

The other agencies which solicited the account included Aubrey, Finlay, Marley & Hodgson, Chicago; Rippey, Henderson, Bucknum & Co., Denver; Maurice Paulsen Advertising and Rohn & Associates, both of Sioux Falls, S. D.; Knox Reeves Advertising, Willis & Borg, William L. Baxter Advertising and Graves & Associates, all of Minneapolis; and Dean Nauman Advertising, Rapid City, S. D., the incumbent agency, which has handled the account for the past two years.

Broyles' contract period will run from Aug. 1 until July 31, 1962. The Broyles agency has held the Colorado tourist advertising contract since 1941, has worked as the agency for the Denver Visitors & Convention Bureau, and has worked in the development of Colorado Springs and Aspen as resort areas.

Indiana Invites Four Agencies to Vie for Toll Road Account

INDIANAPOLIS, May 16—The Indiana Toll Road Commission has invited four agencies to make written presentations for its $75,000 account. The deadline for submitting the presentations is May 26.

The four agencies which have received the invitations are Bozell & Jacobs, whose office here has had the account for about three years; and three Indianapolis agencies—Caldwell, Larkin & Sidener-Van Riper; Carlson & Co.; and Martin & Associates.

The seven members of the toll road commission are expected to decide some time in June if Bozell & Jacobs will be retained or a new agency will be hired.

Earlier last week, the State of Indiana's department of commerce and public relations, after a three-month search, selected Carlson & Co. to handle its $40,000 account. The department also retained Mark Gross & Associates—which was just merged into a new agency, Handley, Gross, Luck & Miller (AA, May 8), as a consultant, and it bought a layout idea from a third agency, Murray-Zickle Advertising Associates.

The Gross agency had handled the account for the past eight years under two Republican administrations. Carlson & Co. presumably will be the commerce department's agency for the next four years.

Other finalists for the $40,000 account included the Bozell and Caldwell agencies and Ruben Advertising Agency.

Larger Shops More Efficient Personnel Users, Rubel Finds

CHICAGO, May 16—The larger the agency, the fewer employees per $100,000 of agency income are generally needed to operate the business.

That's one of the findings of a questionnaire survey by Ira Rubel, reported in the April issue of "Rubel Service," published by Robert Associates, Chicago.

For example, agencies billing under $1,000,000 require 9.5 people per $100,000 income, while agencies billing more than $20,000,000 need about one-third fewer employees, or 6.1 persons per $100,000 of their income.

Agencies in the $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 billings range, however, require larger staffs than agencies billing $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 or those billing $2,000,000 to $5,000,000.

Basis for the comparisons, Mr. Rubel pointed out, is agency income (commissions, percentage charges and fees) because agency billing is becoming more and more distorted as a yardstick as agencies adopt varying methods of compensation.

The averages determined in the survey do not necessarily represent the most efficient agency operations but rather are handy guides for evaluating an agency's operation by comparison with others, Mr. Rubel said. #

Chesterfield Shifts to JWT

 joyed by Newport, which was launched at roughly the same time, and about 3% of Salem's share).

It was a tough year for Mr. Blount, his second full year as president. Observers had noted that he had a high regard for J. Walter Thompson Co., built through contacts over the years, and his daughter had been Stanley Resor's secretary.

Then there was Duke of Durham, L&M's high filter entry, which skidded to a stop when the FTC got the tobacco companies to abandon tar and nicotine claims.

McCann was the agency for Duke, for Oasis and for the regular and king-size versions of Chesterfield. Chesterfield lost less, percentage-wise, in 1960 than did Lucky Strike, Old Gold or Philip Morris. On the other hand, Camel and Pall Mall showed gains, and Chesterfield dropped from sixth to seventh place.

Nevertheless, the precipitous drop in Chesterfield sales came before McCann was on the account (sales dropped from 67 billion cigarettes in 1952 to 32 billion in 1957) and the agency had conducted a holding action. Robert E. Healy, the chairman of McCann-Erickson U.S.A., said in a staff memo that he took pride in the fact that the loss had been shaved in each year—2.5 billion in 1958, 2 billion in 1959, and less than a half-billion in 1960. Chesterfield kings showed a gain of 10% in the March, '60-February, '61 period, he said.

He also said that the total advertising expenditure for Chesterfield was less than the comparable expenditure for any of the ten other leading brands.

This explanation is borne out by measured media statistics, which show Liggett & Myers spending about $18,600,000 total in measured media, far below major competitors (for instance, Philip Morris was spending $24,500,000).

Some observers have guessed, for instance, that while Chesterfield has $10,000,000 put behind it, L&M filters have $15,000,000 behind them. L&M, which ranks just behind Chesterfield, last year sold 3.1 billion fewer cigarettes and sustained a 2% loss against 1959—a bigger loss than Chesterfield's 4%.

The hunch in the trade was that Liggett & Myers management was tired of telling stockholders why its sales weren't going better.

The major medium for Liggett & Myers' McCann brands has been television.

Gross tv time billings for Chesterfield in 1960 were $4,400,000, according to TvB, while Duke and Oasis each had a time budget of about $600,000. Chesterfield moved into ABC heavily last year, buying "The Untouchables," "Adventures in Paradise" and "The Islanders" (later replaced by "Asphalt Jungle"); Liggett & Myers' alternate week of "Twilight Zone" was also placed by McCann. Recently the company launched major New York newspaper campaigns for both Chesterfield and L&M, aimed at maintaining its grip in Gotham, where Chesterfield and L&M have been strong.

The shift may mark something of significance in J. Walter Thompson Co. While Thompson had Old Gold during the early '40s (and revised the apple honey campaign for the brand) there was always a tinge of reluctance in its approach to tobacco companies. Leg-

Last Minute News Flashes

Technicolor Consolidates Account at K&E

LOS ANGELES, May 19—Technicolor Inc., which last month appointed Kenyon & Eckhardt to handle its consumer products advertising, has consolidated its entire account with K&E by naming the agency for its motion picture advertising. McCann-Erickson is the previous agency.

Hamilton Watch Shifts Three Units to VanSant

LANCASTER, PA., May 19—Hamilton Watch Co. has appointed VanSant, Dugdale & Co., Baltimore, to handle advertising for its presentation (award watch) sales, industrial products, and precision metals and electronics divisions. A new budget is still under consideration. This portion of Hamilton's advertising has been with Beaumont, Heller & Sperling, Reading, Pa. The remainder of the U. S. account is handled by N. W. Ayer & Son, Philadelphia.

Trans-Canada Leaves Cockfield; Account May Split

MONTREAL, May 19—Trans-Canada Air Lines has finally moved its $1,600,000 domestic advertising account out of Cockfield, Brown & Co. The TCA account has been on the fence for over a year (AA, Feb. 8, July 11, Oct. 31, Nov. 7). While TCA will make no statement, it is reliably understood that the Cockfield, Brown segment of the account will be split between F. H. Hayhurst Co. and Foster Advertising. Stanfield, Johnson & Hill will be retained to handle collateral material, with an estimated budget of $400,000. In addition, Stanfield will also handle some air freight billings. McCann-Erickson, it is understood, will continue to direct TCA advertising in the U. S. This account is estimated at $1,000,000.

Unilever Assigns Brand to FC&B German Unit

FRANKFURT, May 19—Foote, Cone & Belding's office here has broken into the Unilever roster with its appointment, effective Sept. 1, to handle advertising for Sunlight soap. The brand, expected to bill about $300,000, was formerly with the Unilever house agency, Lintas.

Nalley's Names Compton for XLNT; Other Late News

● Nalley's Inc., Tacoma, has named Compton Advertising, Los Angeles, to handle its new Los Angeles division, XLNT Spanish Foods Co. XLNT, which merged with Nalley's last week, bills about $250,000 and was formerly with Atherton Mogge Privett.

● Nate Newman Grabin, formerly with the Chicago office of Macfadden Publications, has been promoted to western advertising manager. He succeeds Al Degen, who resigned.

● Eugene C. Judd, formerly advertising director of Coty Inc., and Louis Sage, previously an account executive with McCann-Erickson, have joined Ted Bates & Co., New York, as account executives on the Colgate-Palmolive Co. household products division.

● Callaway Mills, New York, marketer of Callaway towels, carpets, rugs, and industrial fabrics, has appointed Sudler & Hennessey to handle its advertising. The account, which will bill $250,000 during the remainder of 1961, was formerly with J. M. Mathes Inc.

● Procter & Gamble, which spent only $5,000 to promote Tide in newspapers during 1960, is reportedly lining up papers for a new campaign for the detergent. Tide has not been in this medium for some time. Benton & Bowles is the agency.

● National Car Rental System has invited nine agencies to make presentations in June for its $600,000 account. They include Biddle Co.; D'Arcy Advertising; Erwin Wasey, Ruthrauff & Ryan; Fulton, Morrissey Co.; Robert Haas Advertising; Kenyon & Eckhardt; John W. Shaw Advertising; and J. Walter Thompson Co. A successor to Gardner Advertising, which resigned two weeks ago (AA, May 8), will be picked before June 30.

● Grove Laboratories, St. Louis, is test marketing Defencin, a new muscle-relaxing tablet for relief of arthritis and rheumatism pains and body aches, in Columbus, O. Newspapers and spot tv are being used. Doherty, Clifford, Steers & Shenfield, New York, is the agency.

● Allstate Enterprises Inc., Skokie, Ill., a new subsidiary of Sears, Roebuck & Co., has organized Allstate Motor Club, which it calls "the first national motor club." Advertising plans and budgets have not been finalized for the new motor club, but advertising presumably will be handled by Leo Burnett Co., agency for Allstate Insurance Co. "Allstate Motor Club Magazine," a new quarterly magazine, will be issued to motor club members; it has not yet been determined if advertising will be accepted.

● Norman Rose has resigned as an account supervisor with Carson/Roberts, Los Angeles, to form his own agency, Norman Rose & Associates. Leaving Carson/Roberts with Mr. Rose is the Abbey Rents account, billing about $150,000.

● Traville Corp., Detroit, new manufacturer of Travel homes and camping equipment, has named Campbell-Ewald its agency. The company will spring its first ad May 24 in the Wall Street Journal. Traville, formed by former Chevrolet dealer William E. Hanson, uses Chevrolet and Corvair chassis for its mobile homes, and plans to sell through Chevrolet dealers.

● McNaughton-Laub, Los Angeles agency that has specialized in industrial ads for more than ten years, has picked up a batch of consumer accounts, billing about $300,000, via acquisition of R. J. Forestal Co. The new business will boost the agency's billings to more than $2,500,000. The new accounts include several real estate developers, Double Cola soft drink and Sopp's car wash. R. J. Forestal will be vp of the agency's consumer products division.

Thompson had no prohibition against cigarettes and had been in contact with Liggett & Myers a number of times over the years. The last time—when JWT men sensed "immediate interest"—was probably about two months ago. Did the shift have anything to do with Thompson's abandoning its longtime indifference to a liquor account? A top Thompson man said, "Thompson doesn't have a policy against handling liquor—it's a policy by practice." #

"It is just as impossible for me to define 'unfair' today as it was for Congress to do nearly 50 years ago," the chairman said. "Congress intended this word to be interpreted as ingeniously as necessary in order to cope with the ingenuity of offenders."

Long ago the Supreme Court ruled that practices not involving fraud or deception may be unlawful because they are unfair, he explained.

 quires to include a request to all networks for copies of affiliation agreements which provide individual affiliates with non-standard compensation arrangements.

■ The inquiry seems to be closely related to FCC's impending move to eliminate option time (AA, May 8). While the commission has studied network and affiliate relationships in the past, some of the lines of investigation at the present time seem to be plowing new ground.

The latest staff move in the network-affiliates relationship situation came on the heels of the announcement that CBS will be using incentive contracts in the future. Under these contracts, affiliates will get only nominal compensation if they clear less than 60% of the CBS network offering, but they will get a 60% rate on all programs they clear over 60%.

FCC's interest in the CBS plan stems from the commission's historic option-in-reverse policy with respect to competition among networks.

■ While the investigation in no way implies an intention by FCC to outlaw non-standard contracts, it may be a measure of some of the effort that is going into preparation for the next go-around on option time.

A majority of the commission is convinced that option time ought to be eliminated. However, in a public notice two weeks ago the commission said it would like some advice from the industry on the kind of rule that should be adopted to eliminate option time (AA, May 8).

■ One argument advanced for the CBS incentive contract at this time is that it would provide special inducement for stations to clear public service programs. The theory proceeds on the assumption that most affiliates will be carrying 60% of the network programming, so that each program cleared—including public service programs—will be paying a 60% rate. #

ARF Unit Finds No Valid Way to Compare Media

NEW YORK, May 17—There is at this time no measuring tool available to advertisers to compare the effectiveness of advertising in different media. Nor is there one looming on the horizon.

This seems to be the overriding conclusion of the audience concepts committee of the Advertising Research Foundation, which this week issued its full report on inter-media comparisons.

The committee, headed by Dr. Seymour Banks, vp of Leo Burnett Co., has labored over this problem for several years. As was indicated by Mr. Banks in a preliminary report two months ago, the committee found that the most promising area for solution of this problem is development of measurements of "advertising perception" (AA, March 20).

Such measurements would tell an advertiser how many people perceived his ad—how many times. But the ARF committee conceded that there is now "a lack of appropriate techniques."

■ In a report laced with admissions of the inadequacy of existing research tools, the ARF had the following to say:

"There appears no way in which we can separate the simple concept of perception from some remembering response with which it is inevitably associated.

"Research on measures of perception is badly needed to develop new procedures and to improve our understanding of existing techniques.

"At this stage we are unable to define any specific measure of what is communicated by an ad. "In this area of communication, we are unable to describe any one completely satisfactory measure."

In short, the ARF recommends more research.

The committee report pointed out that even if perception could be measured, this would still not provide an "absolute measure of effectiveness." Advertisers will still want to know about "the kind of effect" the advertising message had, the report said.

■ The ARF committee rejected the concept of "advertising exposure" as a method of making comparisons between different media. It was pointed out that "exposure" fails to take into account the response of the consumer to the ad, as perception does. It was also pointed out that different media use different definitions of exposure and that there are even different definitions of exposure within one medium.

In addition to perception, the ARF committee singled out two other areas—communication and sales response—as potentially valuable fields for further research. Communication covers more than perception, it gets into the subject of consumer attitudinal responses to advertising—and the ARF report said "much of our future understanding of advertising and advertising media may originate in this area."

Sales response is an area in which the input of advertising and other factors are measured against the resultant sales, and the ARF report said, "There is great promise in research designed to isolate these factors, including particular media values, which together contribute to an outcome in sales."

In fact, the ARF committee said that work in this area of relating advertising to sales would "constitute the most direct attack on the problem of media comparison."

Continental Enters Retail Cigaret Field

from broken cartons. This also is expected to push sales in vending machines, since the operator will receive a 25¢ bonus for every carton he places.

■ Mr. Jacobson said the Continental brands will be priced "exactly even" with competitive brands, although the retailer, by using the coupons himself, could reduce the package price and still show a profit.

He added that the 15¢ coupon is not planned as an introductory offer, but as a regular feature of the Continental brands.

Continental ad copy will refer to the three brands as the "double dividend" cigarettes.

An eight-page special section in Grocers' Spotlight last week announced the campaign to the trade. Consumer ads will break June 5, with 1,000-line two-color insertions in the Detroit News and Free Press, Pontiac Press, Ann Arbor News, Flint Journal, Saginaw News and Bay City Times. Sunday tv supplements of the two Detroit dailies also will be used during the test period.

In addition, 1,662 spots (277 a week) are slated for radio stations WWJ, WJR, WXYZ and WJBK in Detroit, and 1,002 tv spots (167 a week) are scheduled for WWJ-TV, WXYZ-TV, and WJBK-TV, Detroit; CKLW-TV in Windsor, and WNEM-TV in Saginaw-Bay City.

■ S. C. Garfield, president of Garfield Advertising Associates, said that advertising plans after the six-week test will be based on sales during the period, but he added that radio, tv and newspapers still will be used. He said the budget will be based on case sales.

Garfield Associates is handling the Detroit market test, although Continental's national agency is Ritter, Sanford, Miller & Kampf, New York, which took over the account from Blackstone Steiner Co., New York, last December. #

Woolworth Plans Discount Chain

WATERTOWN, N.Y., May 17—Discount retailing took a major step forward today with the announcement that America's oldest and largest variety operation will establish a chain of discount department stores before the end of the year.

F. W. Woolworth Co. detailed the move to its annual stockholder meeting. With sales of more than $1 billion in 1960, Woolworth becomes the largest retailer in the U.S. to enter low-margin operations under the "discount" name.

President Robert C. Kirkwood said the new chain will not conflict with Woolworth's present lineup of 3,483 stores, which will continue as they are. The name of the new chain and sites of the first units were not revealed.

Probably only three retailers not in the food business—Sears, Roebuck; J. C. Penney, and Montgomery Ward—are larger than Woolworth. Last year the variety chain did $1.03 billion in sales. For the first quarter of 1961, they were down 3.4% from 1960, to $282,591,958.

■ Meanwhile, General Merchandise Co., Milwaukee, announced formation of Midwest Corp., a subsidiary, to operate discount department stores. And City Stores Mercantile Co., New York, told its annual shareholders meeting that it plans to switch six of its units into discount operations.

The discount steamroller gained impetus last week at the S. S. Kresge Co. annual meeting, where it was disclosed that Kresge also plans a discount chain. The first outlet is in Redford Township, near Detroit.

In April, Allied Stores Corp. set up a new discount operation called the Almart stores division, and May Co. said it planned experimental operations aimed at lowering distribution and retail costs. #

ad that appeared under his signature as a page in Life (AA, March 20).

When queried over the past year about the rumors of an impending account change, American officials steadfastly denied them and stated that "Young & Rubicam is doing a fine job for us."

■ The new competition for the account sets a dramatic situation. One agency, Lennen & Newell, worked on the account for four years and only two months ago employed American's current ad director.

Another agency, BBDO, has on its roster the former account supervisor and the brother of the client's president. BBDO already services two other airlines, Air France and Western Airlines. Neither is competitive with American although all three lines happen to service Mexico City—Air France out of New York, American out of Chicago and Dallas and Western out of Los Angeles.

A third agency, Doyle Dane Bernbach, already services El Al Israel, which is not competitive with American. The agency has consistently been applauded for its El Al advertising.

A fourth agency, Ted Bates, has never serviced an airline but recently broke out of its package goods box by taking on Mobil gasoline.

■ When American changed agencies two years ago, its sales and profits were at peak levels. This time it's a different story. Investment in new jet equipment and a strong continuing trend toward low-fare coach travel have cut deeply into earnings. In 1960, American suffered a 43.9% decline in net profits, despite a volume gain of 13%. For the first quarter of 1961, it was in the red.

American and United Air Lines are the two largest carriers on domestic routes, each competing on the lush transcontinental routes. American has traditionally been the largest advertiser in the industry. Its $6,000,000 budget is currently divided 50% in newspapers, 20% in magazines and 30% in other media. It has long been a major user of radio with its "midnight" to morn shows over key metropolitan stations across the country.

When Y&R won the account, American officials said: "They have more of everything we need." One of the factors in Y&R's favor was its network of branch offices, deemed important in servicing an airline account. Of the five agencies now in contention, only BBDO can fully meet this qualification.

In addition to Bill Smith, BBDO has one other member of the old American Airlines advertising team in Suren Ermoyan. Mr. Ermoyan was art director on the American account at Ruthrauff & Ryan and Lennen & Newell—and he has the art director awards to show for it. #

WNEW to Handle Its Own Spot Sales

NEW YORK, May 19—Not satisfied to be the nation's top grossing radio station, WNEW will take over its own spot sales throughout the U.S., effective June 1.

According to John V. B. Sullivan, vp and general manager, WNEW last year grossed $7,000,000. Of this figure, $6,000,000 worth of time was sold by the station's New York sales staff and $1,000,000 worth of time by Robert E. Eastman & Co., its representative for sales outside its home city.

The owner, Metropolitan Broadcasting Corp., which also owns WIP, Philadelphia, and WHK, Cleveland, and has a purchase permit pending for KMBC, Kansas City, has set up a national radio sales staff under the direction of H. D. Neuwirth, former WIP sales boss (AA, March 31). Branch offices have been opened in Chicago, Detroit, and San Francisco.

■ With its own sales specialists to woo advertisers based outside of New York, Mr. Sullivan hopes these contracts can be boosted by $500,000 to $1,000,000. This plus the fact that Eastman had been paid a 10% commission will make the national radio sales staff a good investment for Metropolitan, Mr. Sullivan explained. Office space can be shared with Metromedia's Foster & Kleiser division in some cities, he added.

Mr. Neuwirth and his eastern sales manager will work with representatives Edward Petry & Co. and John Blair & Co. on sales for WIP and WHK, respectively. Mr. Sullivan said Metropolitan had no plans for self-representation for those stations. Their representative contracts do not expire for a while

'Discount Merchandiser' Bows; Luncheon Speaker Cantor Hits Sears Ads, Margin

NEW YORK, May 16—Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s advertising and high profit margin were criticized today at a luncheon at which a new Super Market Publishing Co. publication—The Discount Merchandiser, angled at discount-store operators—was unveiled.

The criticism against the Goliath was hurled, unsurprisingly, by a discount chain operator, Sol W. Cantor, president of Interstate Department Stores, which has sales of $160,000,000 as against Sears' $4 billion.

Richard G. Zimmerman is publisher of the new monthly publication, which has a one-time b&w page rate of $750. Murray Bernhard is director of sales and Nathaniel Schwartz is editor in chief. Initial circulation, controlled, is 15,000.

Mr. Cantor said Sears' current, and first, magazine advertising (AA, May 8) was conceived "only because they've been hurt by discounters."

He scoffed at the subhead which said Sears' profit "is less than 5%," pointing out that Interstate profits are 4% before taxes and 2% after, which he said is "more than adequate. I claim this 5% (pre-tax) is too much," he said.

Referring to the Sears copy which discusses the 50 anonymous comparison shoppers who check prices daily for Sears, Mr. Cantor remarked, "We have about 200,000 anonymous comparison shoppers who shop us." #

printed in gravure and devoted to the interests of Greater Philadelphia, begins publication

Always stimulating, often provocative, occasionally controversial—that's the aim of the new Sunday Bulletin Magazine with its locally edited story of Greater Philadelphia and its people.

Here's the type of locally oriented reading you're apt to see in the new magazine: a Philadelphia educator writes about the pros and cons of cutting college years from four to three. Another: Philip Wylie tells how he always gets lost looking for his sister's home on the Main Line.

People—their aspirations, their foibles—will be the core of this new publication. And heightened editorial interest will provide the environment for increased attention to advertising columns.

These days, when every line of advertising must pull its own weight, introduction of the new Sunday Bulletin Magazine, printed in colorful gravure, should prompt a review of your 1961 plans.

In Philadelphia nearly everybody reads The Bulletin.

Ads Can't Get Book Off Launch Pad, but They're Good Boosters: Morrow

Publisher of 'Buy Now, Pay Later' Outlines How New Book Is Promoted

NEW YORK, May 17—How do you promote a book into a best seller? Answer: It can't be done.

William Morrow & Co., one of the medium-size units in the publishing industry, has a lot riding on a book it will publish today, "Buy Now, Pay Later," a study by Hillel Black of the credit industry.

"Buy Now, Pay Later" is backed by a heavy promotion budget—heavy, that is, for the publishing industry. Morrow has already allotted some $15,000 for the campaign, which is two to three times more than it spends to promote its average book.

No one at Morrow, however, is ready to predict that this advertising will be translated into sales at the bookstore level. They are hopeful. But they all agree in calling this a gamble.

■ It is a gamble of some concern to Morrow, because there are already 20,000 copies of "Buy Now, Pay Later" in the hands of booksellers. This is well over the average sale of a book—and every one of these copies is returnable if not sold.

A consumer goods manufacturer with an inventory position like this might turn to a special advertising push to move the product off shelves. In the publishing industry, you sit back, wait for the reviews—and pray.

Morrow will have small box ads running this week in three issues of the New York Times. And it will make its big advertising splurge this Sunday with a page plus two adjoining columns in the New York Times Sunday book review section.

In addition, four small box ads are scheduled for the Times next week.

As far as immediate advertising plans go, that's it, except for co-op schedules arranged with bookstores in some 20 cities across the country.

■ Lawrence Hughes, vp and partner of Morrow, who was the editor on "Buy Now, Pay Later," told ADVERTISING AGE that "no amount of consumer advertising by itself will sell a book."

In the book business, as a matter of fact, advertising follows, rather than precedes, sales. A publisher first begins to advertise heavily to the consumer after a book starts to sell well.

James C. Finkenstaedt, vp and sales promotion manager of Morrow, confirmed this observation, saying, "Why, we'll even take full pages in the New York Times if this book goes."

■ The question is: What makes a book go in the first place?

Morrow believes it has set the stage for a strong takeoff by a heavy pre-publication promotion to the book trade. Mr. Hughes noted: "No book will sell unless the book trade is behind you."

The program for "Buy Now, Pay Later" involved the following steps:

1. When the book loomed on the horizon last year, editor Hughes first did some research. He found to his own satisfaction that consumer debt was a major economic problem, a "topic that is in the air." He also found, happily, that the subject had never before been tackled in a popular book.

2. As the chapters came in from the author, Hughes concentrated on selling the book within the house, because "the company itself first has to be enthused."

3. The book was formally presented to the Morrow sales staff in January. The 12 salesmen were given galley proofs of the book, plus some background information on the credit problem.

4. Armed with this orientation, the salesmen went on the road in February, March and April. Each salesman personally covered about 100 stores, soliciting direct orders. There are about 3,000 hard-cover book outlets in the U.S., of which about 800 are regarded by Morrow as "first-rate accounts." Morrow uses jobbers to cover the stores its salesmen do not reach.

5. At this early point, the selling approach was geared more to the subject matter—credit—than to the book itself. The aim was to convince the booksellers that credit was a problem that touches virtually everybody.

6. Unbound galleys of "Buy Now, Pay Later" were sent to the U.S. Army, U.S. Navy, U.S. Information Agency (all three of these government agencies buy books in quantity for their libraries), Library Journal and Publishers' Weekly.

7. An early galley also went to Virginia Kirkus' Service, New York. This is an advance book-reviewing service paid for by subscribing bookstores—and highly valued by the book publishers. Morrow was delighted when Miss Kirkus bulletined bookstores that "Buy Now, Pay Later" is a "sobering book and ought to be generally required reading."

8. To get quotes that could be used in future advertising, Morrow sent copies of the book to 10 prominent people—and got back six usable comments. Among the endorsers were author Harry Golden ("recommended reading for anyone who owns a Diners' Club card"); New York attorney general Louis J. Lefkowitz ("an informative work on a topic of great interest to all consumers"); Vance Packard ("an illuminating report on an all-American disease") and newspaper columnist Richard Starns ("a terrifying documentation").

9. To get further ammunition to use on booksellers, Morrow sent copies of the book to 10 top bookstores, asking for comments. Back came raves from such weather-vane stores as the Francis Scott Key Book Shop, in Washington, D. C. ("Promote it! You not only have a book that is readable, but one that could be the springboard to liberation for millions of harried citizens"); Miller & Rhoads, Richmond ("One of the most timely books I have read recently"); Burrows, Cleveland ("I am looking forward to it being a top best seller"); Kroch's & Brentano's, Chicago ("I look forward to this book making an early and prolonged appearance among the very top best sellers") and the Brown Shop, Pasadena ("It is a blockbuster, and we will sell it big").

10. James G. Milne, sales manager of Morrow, collected all these comments—from the booksellers and the prominent names—for use in a special brochure mailed to 2,500 bookstore owners and buyers. The bookstores were also supplied with point of sale die-cuts, to be inserted in copies of "Buy Now, Pay Later."

11. The bookstores also were approached via space bought in the catalogs published by book jobbers and via ads in Library Journal and Publishers' Weekly.

12. As publication date neared, Morrow brought in Mary Green, a free-lance specialist in book publicity, to promote the book in consumer channels. She has been contacting financial and labor editors, columnists and radio-tv personalities. Morrow is a publisher that believes strongly in "word-of-mouth" advertising.

MORROW WILLIAM MORROW AND COMPANY

KEY AD—Biggest consumer ad planned by William Morrow for "Buy Now, Pay Later" is this full page and adjoining two columns scheduled for the May 21 New York Times book review section. Total cost of this ad: $3,000.

13. Normally, some 300 free copies of a book are sent out in advance to reviewers and other people. With "Buy Now, Pay Later," this advance distribution totaled 600, of which about 400 went to reviewers. Every member of the Senate banking and finance committee, for example, received a copy.

■ Author Black, editor Hughes and other Morrow people were waiting anxiously this week for the reviews. Mr. Hughes pointed out that while this advance promotion to the trade is essential, no book will sell "if it doesn't live up to the advance promotion."

Reviews are considered "highly important" in the ultimate sales outcome—but this is an area over which the publisher naturally has no control. Not only is there no control over who will review the book, nor over the kind of review—but there is no assurance that the book will be reviewed during the week it is published, or even that it will be reviewed at all. Only a small percentage of new books get reviewed.

At Morrow, the New York Times is generally regarded as the key place for reviews. Both its Sunday review section and the daily editions are deemed important. Jim Finkenstaedt said, "Orville Prescott can make a book overnight." (Mr. Prescott reviews books in the daily paper.)

After the Times, Morrow people value highly the Christian Science Monitor, Wall Street Journal, Chicago Tribune, Washington Post, Time and Newsweek.

■ Mr. Hughes said Morrow usually figures on devoting 10% of its net sales on a book to promotion. With $15,000 already allotted to promotion of "Buy Now, Pay Later," this means the company is gambling on a 60,000 copy sale. ("Buy Now, Pay Later" is priced to retail at $3.95, of which the bookseller gets about 40% and the author between 10% and 15%.)

"We are gambling," Mr. Hughes conceded. "We feel we have a winner."

Morrow is a publisher that turns out about 120 books a year. In 1961, it plans to publish 78 adult fiction and non-fiction books under three imprints—Morrow, William Sloane Associates and M. S. Mill; 42 juveniles; 12 how-to-do-it, garden and cook books under the M. Barrows imprint; and 11 paperbacks under the Apollo label (a joint venture with two other publishers, Dodd, Mead and T. Y.

Crowell). In addition, the company is the distributor of 11 "instant language" and spelling records.

■ The company is privately held, with a controlling interest in the hands of three executives—John T. Lawrence, president, and Messrs. Hughes and Finkenstaedt.

Morrow currently has 97 employees. Ross W. Baker Jr. heads a five-man advertising department, which places advertising directly. Richard Rostron is assistant advertising manager. In addition, there is a publicity director, John Shinn, and an art director, Lydia Fruhauf.

The company has one meat-ticket author, whose books require little in the way of promotion—Erle Stanley Gardner, who has sold more than 120,000,000 copies in his career. Mr. Gardner supplies Morrow with four new books a year, either under his own name or under the A. A. Fair byline. #

Dean Simmons, Paralyzed Agency Head, Dies at 47

LOS ANGELES, May 16—Dean Simmons, 47, who successfully operated his own agency here since 1945 despite almost total paralysis of his arms and legs, died at his home May 6 after a brief illness.

When he was 19, he was injured in an automobile wreck that left him only with partial use of his left arm. A benefactor later financed him through a correspondence course that eventually led him into advertising. In the mid-'30s he joined Henry Mayers Co. here, and in 1945, after acquiring experience in broadcast and direct mail advertising, he opened his own agency. Until his death, Mr. Simmons conducted virtually all of his business via telephone from a bed in his offices in the western section of Los Angeles.

Although the status of the Simmons agency is undetermined, it was thought that the business will continue to be operated by Pauline Simmons, the late adman's widow and partner.

WILLIAM P. GARDNER

NEW YORK, May 16—William P. Gardner, 58, an administrative assistant to the president of Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn, died May 11 at his home. Mr. Gardner had had a long-standing heart condition.

Appointed to the president's staff four years ago, he had spent most of his career at BBDO and at its two predecessor agencies. He served in the production and forwarding departments of George Batten Co. from 1918 to 1922, and as assistant to the ad manager of Gould Storage Battery Co. from 1922 to 1927. Mr. Gardner joined Barton, Durstine & Osborn in 1927.

He became head of BBDO's outdoor ad department and later served in the media department and in client service.

EARL MCGINNIS

POMPANO BEACH, Fla., May 17—Earl McGinnis, 67, retired general merchandising manager of the AC spark plug division of General Motors Corp., died May 16 in a hospital here.

He was AC's advertising manager from 1922 through 1945. He came to Flint in 1914, and was first employed by Buick. In 1945, he was promoted to manager of national account sales for AC, and to general sales promotion manager in 1947. He was made general merchandising manager in 1953 and retired April 1, 1955.

EDWIN CAHN

LOS ANGELES, May 16—Edwin Cahn, 67, director of West Coast operations of Pulse Inc., died at his home here, May 14, presumably of a cerebral hemorrhage.

Prior to joining Pulse in 1955, Mr. Cahn was with Avery-Knodel Inc., Los Angeles. Before joining Avery-Knodel, Mr. Cahn was a vp of George H. Hartman Co., Chicago. In the mid 1920's he joined J. J. Sugden, Co., predecessor of Hartman, which he left in 1952.

STASIA M. KIELY

HARVEY, ILL., May 16—Stasia M. Kiely, 68, veteran time and space buyer and former order department supervisor of Erwin Wasey, Ruthrauff & Ryan, Chicago, died May 14 after a short illness in Ingalls Memorial Hospital.

An employe of EWRR for 38 years, Miss Kiely joined the old Ruthrauff & Ryan agency on Dec. 6, 1922, the same year the agency opened its Chicago office. She was the agency's third oldest employe in point of service. #

This Week in Washington . . .

Congress Reacts to Minow Blast; Set to Block Reorganization of FCC

By Stanley E. Cohen
Washington Editor

WASHINGTON, May 18—Federal Communications Commission Chairman Newton Minow was discovering this week that it is a lot easier to make a speech about the performance of the tv industry than to force any change.

Last week the podium was all his as he told the industry in several thousand barbed words how little he thought of its product. This week the industry, the Congress, and his uneasy colleagues at FCC found a way to demonstrate how little they think of Chairman Minow.

At this writing the whip still hasn't been applied to the chairman's back. But Speaker Sam Rayburn had pronounced sentence, and there usually isn't any appeal once Speaker Sam speaks.

At the time Chairman Minow appeared before the broadcasters' convention, Congress was marking time on a Presidentially-approved reorganization plan which tries to improve the performance of FCC by putting more administrative discretion into the hands of the chairman.

Similar plans have been published for other regulatory agencies. Because the need to eliminate useless red tape is so obvious, the members of these agencies and the people they regulate are united in wanting these reorganizations.

Some scattered opposition to a reorganization of FCC had been advanced before Chairman Minow appeared at the convention last week. Now this has swelled into a mighty flood. While the reorganization of the other agencies will be accomplished, Speaker Rayburn said today the House is not going to allow the reorganization of FCC to go into effect.

When he stood before the National Assn. of Broadcasters, Chairman Minow seems to have overestimated his own influence.

At that time NAB was inclined to stand on the sidelines and let the FCC reorganization go into effect. But broadcasters who found themselves seared by the chairman's incendiary phrases, thirsted for revenge. Many felt anything that adds to Chairman Minow's prestige and power is bad for their industry. Their association and friends in Congress came under pressure to pin the chairman's ears back. In the face of this industry indignation, Chairman Minow lost the support of his own commission and failed to get any help from the White House.

While the members of the commission have registered their willingness to demand better performance from broadcasters, several have been offended by the chairman's frequent use of the word "I".

Massive assaults on the FCC reorganization became possible when four commissioners, led by former Chairman Fred Ford, decided to lead the opposition. Although Commissioner Ford signified his support for the goal the President had in mind, and couched his opposition only in technical terms, the result for Chairman Minow was the same: Lack of support on a matter he regards as critical for the effective management of the commission.

In this hour of need, he was alone. The White House assured him the President was pleased with the speech that he delivered to the broadcasters. Yet the FCC reorganization—which was drafted in the office of White House Advisor James M. Landis—was left to stand or fall solely on the support that Chairman Minow could mobilize on his own.

The sharp speech which Chairman Minow delivered at NAB last week can be explained only if it is regarded as part of the transition that has been under way here since Jan. 20, when the New Frontiersmen came into office.

Chairman Minow's speech, and recent speeches by Federal Trade Commission Chairman Paul Rand Dixon seem to be designed to emphasize an important reality: There is new management in the regulatory agencies.

Eventually, of course, the new vigor may evaporate, and government may be allowed to sink back into its old way of doing things. But the new people have new goals in mind. And at the moment they are at the peak of their enthusiasm.

Although broadcasters were shocked by the frankness of Chairman Minow's speech last week, he undoubtedly chose the words he directed to the convention of the National Assn. of Broadcasters very carefully. Not even the most bigoted of the industry's critics have been more harsh. So the FCC chairman clearly must have had certain objectives in mind, possibly including the following:

1. A declaration of independence. Investigators have contended that FCC, more than some other regulatory agencies, tends to identify itself with the people it is supposed to regulate. At the NAB, he seized an ideal opportunity to serve notice that things have changed.

2. A challenge to broadcasters. Many people in Washington are finally beginning to realize how seriously the tide is turning against us in many parts of the world. By President Kennedy, and again by Chairman Minow, broadcasters were being reminded that the diet of violence, unreal situation comedies and escapism provides a sedative at a time when it is vital that tv stimulate our people to a mature understanding of themselves and the dangerous world in which we live.

3. An effort to mobilize public opinion. While broadcasters are as fine and constructive a group as one is likely to find in any single segment of our society, their programming decisions inevitably respond to their understandable desire to make maximum profits. By getting the problems of tv programming into the open—onto the front pages—the FCC chairman creates a compulsion for them to be a bit more selective in choosing between profit and public service.

The Minow speech was particularly jarring to broadcasters because they had no reason to expect anything so harsh. In recent years, many FCC members have sounded as if they felt their jobs depended on a vote of confidence from NAB. Now Chairman Minow has swung to the opposite end of the dial, handling himself as if his last concern was the feelings of the people whose convention he had been invited to address.

In Chairman Minow, broadcasters are dealing with something new: A chairman who has a detached view of the industry he has been appointed to regulate. When you talk with him, he has the self confidence of a man who, at 35, has been able to give up a successful law practice for a brief term of public service. Having been confirmed for a seven-year term, he emphasizes time and again: (1) That he has no desire to be reappointed; and (2) that he has no intention of going into the broadcasting industry.

Analysis of his NAB speech readily demonstrates that his program is far from revolutionary. Last summer—long before Chairman Minow was on the horizon—FCC issued a basic policy statement which put the industry on notice that it was expected to improve its programming performance.

This sensible step was approved 5-1, under the leadership of Chairman Fred Ford. But Fred Ford was never successful in capturing the attention of either the broadcasters or the public. Virtually the same program, now rephrased in the biting words of Newton Minow, hit the broadcasters like something out of the blue.

In its pre-Minow policy decision last July, FCC mentioned various types of programming that a well-operated station should provide. The commission said it would expect broadcasters to make an intensive effort to determine the needs of the individual community, and then to meet the needs. "We do not intend to guide the licensee along the path of programming," FCC declared. "On the contrary, the licensee must find his own path with the guidance of those whom its signal is to serve" (AA, Aug. 1, '60).

Less publicized than the Minow speech was the significant policy statement by FTC Chairman Dixon at the meeting of the National Better Business Bureau at Phoenix.

Last week, to the embarrassment of his hosts, the new FTC chairman signified that he is not entirely sold on "self regulation" in advertising, as exemplified by the better business bureau movement. "It is extremely difficult, if not impossible," he said, "to design an impressive temple where provision must be made for the care and feeding of sacred cows."

The better business bureaus and the other agencies of self regulation are fine, as far as they go, he seemed to be suggesting. But, under his direction, the FTC intends to keep an eye on those "sacred cows," so that the voluntary organizations can concern themselves solely with "the vast majority of business men who have the honor and capacity to police themselves."

Mars Ad Budget Grew from $300 in '21 to $3,000,000; Puts Half in Spot TV

Candy Marketer Feels Dieting Has Caused 3-Year Sales Plateau

By Emmett Curme

CHICAGO, May 16—Mars Inc., which reportedly is the world's largest manufacturer of chocolate-covered candy bars, ascribes its success to three simple reasons. In addition to the two obvious ones—excellent products and good distribution—Mars has always been a strong advertiser and always has outpromoted its competition.

The late Frank C. Mars, who started the company in his Minneapolis home in 1920, would be amazed at the size of the Mars operation today. In the early days, Mr. Mars and his wife, the late Ethel Mars, produced candy on their kitchen stove and then went out and sold their products. Today, Mars Inc. produces an average of 10,000,000 candy bars daily at its one and only plant, in Chicago.

In 1921, Mr. Mars invested some $300 in advertising, which consisted largely of point of sale materials. Later in the 1920s, the company started using outdoor advertising—a medium it still uses heavily today. In 1929, Mars moved into national advertising, using such publications as Collier's and The Saturday Evening Post.

After nearly 20 years of advertising, Mars hit the jackpot in 1939. As an experiment to promote Milky Way candy bars, Mars picked up the sponsorship of a radio program called "Dr. I.Q." The program was produced in an Atlanta theater and broadcast on an Atlanta station.

After 13 weeks on the air, Mars' sales in Atlanta showed a tremendous increase. By the end of 1939, National Broadcasting Co. put the "Dr. I.Q." show on its radio network, and the show soon became a national success. "I have a lady in the balcony, doctor," became a familiar catch phrase throughout the U.S.

The show became so popular that Mars brought out a Dr. I.Q. candy bar in 1941, but discontinued the product in 1946. Mars dropped sponsorship of "Dr. I.Q." in 1947.

Following World War II, Mars moved into a new advertising medium—television—and has sponsored such children's shows as strong in some areas, weak in others. Mars advertising lost its emphasis in some major markets, he said.

For the 1960-'61 season, Mars decided to drop all network tv in favor of local spot tv in 35 major markets. "All of our tv spots are tailored as far as products and markets are concerned," the Mars official said. "To back up our tv, we are using outdoor in 200 markets. We find that we get frequency with outdoor that we can't get with tv. Tv and outdoor complement each other."

Mars has an advertising budget this year of $3,000,000. Of this money, about 50% goes into spot tv, 48% into outdoor and the other 2% into subway cards in New York City. Mars also invested $3,000,000 in advertising in 1960 and 1959.

A vital part of the Mars advertising is its symbol—"Mooky," the animated cow, which was created last fall by the company's current agency—Needham, Louis & Brorby. "Mooky" is used in all Mars advertising and has created an image for all Mars products, according to the company.

Mars has been a relative stable account from an agency's point of view, having employed only four agencies over the last 24 years. Grant Advertising handled the account from 1937 until 1950; Leo Burnett Co. from 1950 to 1956; and Knox Reeves from 1956 until 1959, when it lost Mars to NL&B. Both Grant and Burnett resigned the candy maker.

NUTTY SNICKERS—Mars' Snickers bar is featured in this outdoor sign. Outdoor and local spot tv currently are the most important media used by Mars.

Mary Hartline's "Super Circus," "Buffalo Bill Jr." and "Howdy Doody." For a number of years, Mars experienced sizable gains in sales because of the tv advertising.

However, the bloom left television for Mars after the 1959-'60 season. Mars spent a good portion of its budget for participations on "Disneyland" and "Broken Arrow." Sales failed to show an increase. "It was not the right kind of buy for us," a Mars official said.

He went on to explain that because of its seven products, the company has different sales situations in various markets throughout the country. For example, he pointed out, Snickers bars are past 40 years. In 1922, the company had less than $100,000 in sales. In 1929, the first year of the big depression, sales had vaulted to more than $20,000,000, with all of the proceeds coming from 5¢ candy bars.

During the next ten years, growth was steady but not as rapid, with 1940 sales reaching about $25,000,000. By 1950, sales had climbed to an estimated $47,000,000. Last year, Mars' sales reportedly ran between $60,000,000 and $65,000,000. Exact figures are not available because Mars is a privately held company.

However, sales have been at the $60,000,000-$65,000,000 level for the past three years, and this situation has worried Mars officials. They point out that candy consumption in the U.S. last year was about 16 lbs. per person—about the same as ten years ago.

The candy industry in the past had the reputation of being staid and conservative. Candy companies generally do little or no advertising, with a few notable exceptions. Weight reduction fads have hurt candy consumption in recent years.

The picture has changed over the past two or three years, however. Candy makers have been hiring experienced marketing and advertising personnel from such marketing giants as Procter & Gamble, General Foods and Lever Bros. Many new products have been introduced, and new merchandising techniques have been developed which have made the competitive situation much tougher.

The fight for shelf space in the supermarkets has increased. In addition to regular competition in the bar candy field, such companies as Mars have faced additional competition from "boxed candy" companies like Stephen F. Whitman & Son and E. J. Brach & Sons, which have invaded supermarkets with small packs of their candies.

In an effort to hypo its sales and meet its competition, Mars has completely revamped its marketing team over the past 18 months. The key members of the marketing team are Norman Vance Jr., 45, vp and director of marketing, who joined Mars in this newly created position in November, 1959 (AA, Nov. 9, '59); Richard W. Solon, 37, advertising director, who joined the company in January, 1960; and John Coady, 37, general sales manager, who was since the company does not have an advertising department, with the exception of Mr. Solon. The key men on the Mars account at NL&B are Vinton Hall, management representative; John Nagel, account supervisor, and Carl Eller, account executive.

Mars markets seven products—six candy bars and Marsettes, bite-size chocolate pieces with caramel and mint cream centers, packaged in roll form. The six bars are Milky Way, Snickers, 3 Musketeers, Mars bar, Forever Yours and Mars Coconut bar.

Milky Way is by far the largest selling Mars product—accounting for an estimated 40% of all Mars sales. Milky Way is believed to be the second largest selling 5¢ candy bar in the world, ranking second only to the Hershey milk chocolate bar.

Snickers and 3 Musketeers also are big sellers for the company, ranking among the top ten selling 5¢ candy bars in the U.S. Snickers and 3 Musketeers account for an estimated 20% apiece of total Mars' sales.

In the 10¢ bar field, the Mars bar rates as the second largest seller, ranking just behind Peter Paul Mounds. All of the Mars products, with the exception of Marsettes, come in the 5¢, 10¢ and 15¢ sizes. Marsettes, which were introduced in 1957, sell for 10¢ a package and 39¢ a box. Marsettes are the company's first entry in the box candy field.

Earlier this month, Mars introduced to its sales force junior-size bars of Milky Ways, Snickers and 3 Musketeers, packaged in polyethylene bags. The bags, which will sell for 59¢ and contain more than 1 lb. of candy, are aimed at the Halloween "trick or treat" crowd.

Mars has national distribution for all of its products, but distribution is better for some than for others. Milky Ways are sold in 98% of the food stores in the U.S. and in more than 800,000 retail outlets (more than 1,000,000 outlets, if vending machines are considered). Snickers bars, on the other hand, are very popular in the South but have spotty distribution in other areas of the U.S.

Although more than 75% of Mars' sales come from 5¢ candy bars, the company's 10¢ bars have been increasing in importance over the past four years. The trend is true generally in the candy field. It is estimated that about 20% of Mars' revenue comes from 10¢ bars. On the other hand, 15¢ bars account for only 2% to 3% of Mars' sales. They are made primarily for consumption by theater goers.

Up until this year, Mars maintained a strict one-price policy to all distributors, regardless of size—an unusual situation in the food and candy field. The company deviated from this policy several months ago and now allows a 2% discount for full truckloads of Mars products purchased.

John Coady Norman Vance

Before joining Mars, Mr. Vance was president of Callerman Co., Skokie, Ill., food broker. Mr. Solon formerly was a product manager with the Post cereals division of General Foods.

In addition, Mars last fall established a new products development department and named William F. Suhring to head up this department (AA, Nov. 28). Then Mars appointed John F. Elrod as director of marketing research, succeeding Mr. Suhring (AA, Dec. 12). Mr. Elrod formerly was economic analyst of United Air Lines.

One of Mr. Vance's first jobs was helping to move the Mars advertising account from Knox Reeves Advertising, Minneapolis, to Needham, Louis & Brorby (AA, Nov. 16, '59).

"Needham, Louis has done a terrific job for us," one Mars executive said. "They are hard workers and have produced some excellent advertising for Mars."

The agency works on a straight 15% commission basis and produces all of Mars' advertising, has been a Mars tradition since its founding. "Our biggest tool is advertising," one Mars official said.

Mars Bars . . .

With a $3,000,000 advertising budget, Mars reportedly is the largest advertiser in the bar candy field. (Hershey Chocolate Corp., probably the world's largest candy company, is the most famous non-advertiser in the world.)

Mars' three other largest competitors have smaller ad budgets. Peter Paul Inc. invests more than $2,000,000; Curtiss Candy Co. has a $1,000,000-plus budget; and Nestle Co. spends about $1,000,000 to promote its line of candy products.

■ In addition to the national candy companies, there are thousands of local and regional candy makers scattered throughout the U.S. Despite the fact that many of them market excellent products, the large majority of these companies do little or no advertising.

Mars devotes the biggest portion of its ad budget to the promotion of Milky Way—its best seller. Snickers and 3 Musketeers also are widely promoted, and Mars-ettes, which the company feels has a bright future, has also received some generous ad allotments. Mars has not promoted its Forever Yours and Mars Coconut bar since 1958. ■

POPAI Elects Fenster

Harry Fenster, president of I. Fenster & Sons, Brooklyn, has been elected president of the Point-of-Purchase Advertising Institute. He succeeds Richard H. Dickson Jr., president of Indiana Wire & Specialty Co., Indianapolis, who was elected chairman of the board. Carl Bergmann, president of Palmer Associates, New York, was elected treasurer.

'PI' Names Wortman

Printers' Ink, New York, has appointed Victor Wortman, formerly editor of two magazines for Allstate Insurance Co., Midwest editor in Chicago succeeding Maurice English, who has resigned to become editor of the University of Chicago Press.

strate their records in stereophonic broadcasts.

The regular mass product advertiser, however, will not be attracted to the medium until he sees a substantial interest in it by the general public, according to Herbert Mendelsohn, sales manager of WABC-FM, New York. He expected his station to be equipped for stereo before the end of the year. "We hope to adopt stereo as soon as we can, but it still has not been determined when the transmitting equipment will be available and how much it will cost," he added.

Another WABC-FM executive said the industry was caught off-guard, having expected the FCC to approve the Crosley system of multiplexing, rather than the Zenith-GE plan.

■ John Rieger, president and owner of WLIR (fm), Garden City, N.Y., said he planned to move into stereo broadcasting as soon as equipment is available. He expected this would not be for a month or two.

WLIR already is multiplexing background music (for stores, restaurants, etc.), so the station has part of the equipment it will need for stereophonic broadcasting. Mr. Rieger estimated that additional equipment for the station would run about $2,500.

Mr. Rieger likened stereo fm to color tv. Just as people tended to hold onto their b&w sets, procrastination will keep them with their old monaural fm sets for some time to come. There will be a boost in advertising on fm, but not in the immediate future, Mr. Rieger said.

WRFM, New York, expects to begin stereo broadcasting within six months. The station will probably confine stereo to the evening hours, Edith Dick, station manager, said.

■ Most fm radio manufacturers don't expect to have stereo models to show their dealers until late June or July, and sets won't be on the market until the fall. Zenith expects to have stereo consoles available to consumers shortly after Labor Day. Table models will be ready about 90 days later. Prices will range from $30 to $60 higher than comparable monaural fm receivers. The company will set its ad plans about mid-June.

Zenith has prepared a 12-page booklet, "Factual Answers To DISCOVERER—Tom Heath (right), account executive, Leo Burnett Co., Chicago, registers pleasure as Sid Warden of Sunset Magazine's Chicago office informs him he is the lucky winner of the Sunset Discovery Trip. The trip (to the West Coast, of course) was given in a drawing of names of Chicago area admen who attended a Sunset presentation luncheon.

Your Questions about Stereo FM Broadcasting," which it will distribute soon through its dealers and its showrooms. Some time this summer, Zenith's Chicago fm station, WEFM, expects to begin stereo broadcasting.

Motorola, which sees stereo fm as a real "shot in the arm," expects to introduce 10 or 12 stereo consoles to dealers early this summer. Advertising will be launched when sets are ready for sale some time in the fall.

■ Radio Corp. of America and Olympic expect to begin production about July. RCA has also developed an adapter for multiple broadcasting and expects to have it ready for broadcasters about the same time.

About ten hi-fi units in Olympic's new line will be equipped with stereo fm receivers. The company also will produce adapters for current models and will equip a large number of tv-radio-phonos combinations with stereo fm. Olympic does not plan to manufacture any stereo table models because it feels a larger unit is necessary to house the stereo equipment. The company will slant its advertising toward stereo in a fall print campaign.

Pilot Radio Corp. plans to produce five or six radio-phonos consoles equipped with stereo. These units will range from about $400 or $500 to $3,500. The company also will produce stereo components. Print ads will start about September when the stereo equipment is ready.

Two "stereo theater" radio-tv-hi-fi combos will be furnished with fm by Muntz. The company doesn't expect stereo to increase the cost of the combo by more than $10.

Stromberg-Carlson has designed an adapter kit as an adjunct to its current Young 'America line of radio-hi-fi consoles for stereo fm reception. The company has no plans yet for the production of fm sets with stereo already built in. Stereo will be promoted, but no ad plans have been made yet. ■

'Puck' Offers Cars in Ad Competition for Art-Copy Teams

NEW YORK, May 16—Puck—The Comic Weekly today started its second annual $25,000 "Ad Utopia" contest for creative agency people.

The contest—open to two-member copywriter and artist teams—closes July 7. Under rules of the competition, which last year drew 220 entries, the teams write and lay out "the perfect ad for Puck." The product may be real or fictional, so long as it has broad consumer appeal. Teams can use continuity strip, display, or other techniques.

First prizes ("winners can toss a coin to see who gets what") are two 1961 station wagons—a Dodge and a Plymouth. Runners-up get a 1961 Vallant sedan and a 1961 Lancer; 36 additional prizes of Philco products ranging from tv-stereo combinations to portable stereos are offered.

■ Ads will be judged "on the basis of originality, professional skill and probable sales impact," according to J. Hugh E. Davis, vp and general manager of Puck. Three judges who served last year—when a Cunningham & Walsh team copped the honors—form the new panel: John Orr Young, advertising consultant; Walter O'Meara, author of "The Savage Country" and a former agency man; and Albert Dorne, illustrator and a founder of the Famous Artists School. ■

CHICAGO, May 18—More than a dozen leaders in advertising and business thought are contributors of essays to "The Promise of Advertising," a book to be published in the late summer to honor James Webb Young, advertising's elder statesman, in the year of his 75th birthday.

Edited by C. H. Sandage, head of the department of advertising at the University of Illinois college of journalism and communications, the book will present a selection of looks at advertising in the American society, defining its purposes, examining its accomplishments and forecasting its future role.

The essay contributors, in order of their chapters, are Paul G. Hoffman (foreword); Mr. Young himself; Harold B. Thomas, a founder and former director of the Advertising Council; Theodore S. Replier, president of the Advertising Council; Charles H. Kellstadt, board chairman, Sears, Roebuck & Co.; Norman H. Strouse, president, J. Walter Thompson Co.; Burleigh B. Gardner, executive director, Social Research; Donald R. Longman, president-elect, American Marketing Assn.; Martin Mayer, author; Marion Harper Jr., president, McCann-Erickson; Mr. Sandage; Roy E. Larsen, executive committee chairman, Time Inc.; Howard Morgens, president, Procter & Gamble Co.; Charles G. Mortimer, chairman, General Foods Corp.; and Sherwood Dodge, vp and director of marketing, toilet articles division, Colgate-Palmolive Co.

■ It will be published by Richard D. Irwin Inc. All royalties from the $5.00 book and all income to the publisher above his costs will accrue to a fund for education in advertising, which was established in Mr. Young's name at the University of Illinois (AA, Nov. 7, '60).

Contributions to the fund may be sent either to Dr. Sandage at the University of Illinois in Urbana, or to G. D. Crain Jr., ADVERTISING AGE, 200 E. Illinois St., Chicago 11. ■

on editorial and 100% increases on advertising portions. Both stressed that magazine advertising volume has dropped from peak years, and that the drop in early 1961 has been particularly sharp.

Rep. Berry questioned them about the efforts of publishers to develop distribution outside the mail. With the nation becoming increasingly urbanized, he suggested this may become practical and may be a good solution both for the publishers and the Post Office.

Publishing industry witnesses emphasized their belief that Post Office accounting fails to identify public service costs which are loaded on mail users, and does not accurately separate the cost of handling big national magazine from the cost of handling the less remunerative kinds of mail.

They said they are willing to pay their full costs when these are properly identified, but that no users should be required to pay costs incurred in behalf of other users. Rep. Berry said he agreed in principle. "I feel no taxpayer should have to pay costs incurred in behalf of people who use the mail," he said. ■
